Introduction 1

PART I DELIMITING THE UNCONCEIVED 5

1 String theory 9
1.1 A brief introduction to string theory 9
1.2 The conflicting assessments of the current status of string theory 19
1.3 Three contextual arguments for the viability of string theory 30
2 The conceptual framework 39
2.1 The classical paradigm of theory assessment 39
2.2 Scientific underdetermination 44
3 The assessment of scientific underdetermination in string theory 50
3.1 Connections between theory assessment and scientific underdetermination 50
3.2 The framework for claims of limitations to scientific underdetermination 59
3.3 The scope of the three arguments 62
3.4 Non-empirical theory assessment as inference to the best explanation 64
3.5 A Bayesian analysis 68

PART II A WIDER PERSPECTIVE 73

4 The dynamics of high energy physics 75
4.1 Two crucial principles in modern high energy physics 75

4.2 Theory dynamics beyond the current limits of empirical testability 82
4.3 Theory assessment in a new scientific environment 94
5 Scientific underdetermination in physics and beyond 97
5.1 The marginalization of the phenomena 97
5.2 The question of microphysical objects 103
5.3 Empirical confirmation in high energy physics 109
5.4 Non-empirical assessment of the Higgs theory 112
5.5 The confirmation of the top quark 115
5.6 A brief excursion into palaeontology 118
5.7 A new understanding of theory assessment 123

PART III PHYSICS AND TRUTH 127

6 Final theory claims 129
6.1 Two final theory claims in string physics 129
6.2 Local and global limitations to scientific underdetermination 134
6.3 Structural uniqueness and its impact on the question of finality 141
6.4 The formal structure of final theory arguments 147
6.5 The case of anthropic reasoning 149
6.6 A new conception of scientific progress 152
6.7 The end of science? 155
7 An altered perspective on scientific realism 157
7.1 The layout of the debate 157
7.2 Unconceived alternatives 164
7.3 Scientific realism and non-empirical theory evaluation 169
7.4 Consistent structure realism 174
7.5 Whither physical theory? 189
