This book examines the obsession for new technology that swept through Britain and Germany between 1890 and 1945. Drawing on a wide range of popular contemporary writings and pictorial material, it explains how, despite frequently feeling overwhelmed by innovations, Germans and Britons nurtured a long-lasting fascination for aviation, glamorous passenger liners, and film as they lived through profound social transformations and two vicious wars.

Public discussions about these “modern wonders” were torn between fears of novel risks and cultural decay on the one hand, and passionate support generated by nationalism and social fantasies on the other. While the investigation focuses on tensions between technophobia and euphoria, the book also examines the relationship between responses to technology and the differing political cultures in Britain and Germany before and after 1933.

This innovative study will prove invaluable reading to anyone interested in German and British history as well as the history of technology.

B E N N H A R D R I E G E R teaches modern history at the International University Bremen. He has co-edited Meaning of Modernity: Britain from the Late-Victorian Era to World War II (2001) with Martin J. Daunton.
NEW STUDIES IN EUROPEAN HISTORY

Edited by

PETER BALDWIN, University of California, Los Angeles
CHRISTOPHER CLARK, University of Cambridge
JAMES B. COLLINS, Georgetown University
MÍA RODRÍGUEZ-SALGADO, London School of Economics and Political Science
LYNDAL ROPER, University of Oxford

The aim of this series in early modern and modern European history is to publish outstanding works of research, addressed to important themes across a wide geographical range, from southern and central Europe, to Scandinavia and Russia, and from the time of the Renaissance to the Second World War. As it develops the series will comprise focused works of wide contextual range and intellectual ambition.

For a full list of titles published in the series, please see the end of the book.
TECHNOLOGY AND THE CULTURE OF MODERNITY IN BRITAIN AND GERMANY, 1890–1945

BERNHARD RIEGER

International University Bremen
Dedication

To Liz
Contents

List of illustrations  page viii
Acknowledgments  ix

1 Introduction 1
2 "Modern wonders": technological innovation and public ambivalence 20
3 Accidents: the physical risks of technology 51
4 Elusive illusions: the cultural and political properties of film 86
5 Pilots as popular heroes: risk, gender, and the aeroplane 116
6 "Floating palaces": passenger liners as objects of pleasure 158
7 Fantasy as social practice: the rise of amateur film 193
8 Technology and the nation in Britain and Germany 224
9 Conclusion 276

Bibliography  286
Index  315
Illustrations

2.1 Postcard of the liner Bremen. Author’s collection. page 27
2.2 Postcard of the Titanic. Author’s collection. 44
3.1 Photomontage of Lt. Deutsches Schifffahrtsmuseum, Bremerhaven. 63
5.1 From Elly Beinhorn, Ein Mädchen fliegt um die Welt. 143
5.2 Star postcard of Amy Johnson. John Capstack Archive. 145
6.1 Drawing of riveters in a shipyard. Deutsches Schifffahrtsmuseum. 174
6.2 Fritz Breuhaus de Groot, Bauten und Räume. Verlag Ernst Wasmuth. 179
6.3 The Queen Mary’s cocktail bar. University of Liverpool Library. 182
7.1 Cine Nizo advertisement. Deutsches Museum, Munich. 200
7.2 Advertisement for a Kodak film projector. Kodak Inc. 214
Acknowledgments

While working on this book, I have incurred innumerable debts of gratitude. For financial research support I would like to thank the German Historical Institute London, the British Academy, the Royal Historical Society, the Remarque Institute at New York University, the Research Institute at the Deutsches Museum in Munich, the National Science Foundation in Washington DC, and the Fellows of Churchill College for electing me to a Bye-Fellowship in 2002. A special “thank you” has to go to the history department at University College London, which funded my PhD and thus made possible four wonderful years. Furthermore, the historians at Iowa State University gave me that most elusive of commodities: a first proper job. Amy Sue Bix, Hamilton Cravens, Jerry Garcia, John Monroe, George McJimsey, Andrejs Plakans, and David Wilson: thanks to you all, and particularly to Jean and Alan I. Marcus.

As far as their “sources” are concerned, few historians manage to progress beyond the stage of the obsessive hunter and gatherer. I certainly did not, and the librarians and archivists of a wide range of institutions helped to satisfy my atavistic instincts. This book could not have been written without the assistance of staff at the British Library, the Staatsbibliotheken in Berlin and Munich, the Deutsches Museum Munich, Erlangen University Library, Imperial College Library, the Centre of South Asian Studies in Cambridge, Liverpool University Archives, the Deutsches Schifffahrtsmuseum Bremerhaven, the British Film Institute, and the Stiftung Deutsche Kinemathek Berlin. Every effort has been made to identify copyright-owners of sources quoted.

Companionship, conversation, meals, and, above all, good humor are what my friends shared with me. Heidi and Achim Bade, James Andrews and Maggie LaWare, James Berg and Martha Woodruff, Frank Hack, Marisa Kern, Tracy and Ethan Kleinberg, Elke Metzner and Thomas Schauer together with Moritz and Anika, Konstanze Scharring, and Jonathan Williams have all made sure that there is more to life than work.
Acknowledgments

I have the fondest memories of the time spent with my granny and her “boyfriend” Robert Winterstein, who entertained and helped Liz and me when research took us to Munich. Thanks also to my mother and father.

Many scholars have generously discussed and challenged my ideas at conferences and seminars, while others commented on chapters and offered organizational advice. Those who helped the project to become a reality include Rachel Aucott, Peter Baldwin, Geoff Crossick, David Edgerton, David French, Kevin Greenbank, Matthew Hilton, Klaus-Peter Kiedel, Frieder Kießling, Axel Körner, Jon Morris, Mary Nolan, John North, Erika Rappaport, Lyndal Roper, Sonya Rose, Bruce Seely, Willibald Steinmetz, J. Adam Tooze, Frank Trentmann, and Helmut Trischler. David Cannadine examined the dissertation and has offered encouragement in many forms since. In countless emails and phone conversations Michael Dintenfass helped me to try out fuzzy ideas, as did Johannes Paulmann, David Feldman, and Peter Mandler, who repeatedly took the time to turn my hunches into arguments. One of my former dissertation advisors, Rebecca Spang, has provided many a spark over the years. Jane Caplan and Geoff Eley took a persistent interest in this project from the outset and have supported my efforts with embarrassing generosity. Martin Daunton has shown more patience, encouragement, and enthusiasm than anyone becoming a historian could possibly begin to expect from a mentor.

The book is dedicated to Liz, who is my biggest source of inspiration.