New Third Edition

African Archaeology

David W. Phillipson, University of Cambridge

In this fully revised and expanded edition of his seminal archaeological survey, David Phillipson presents a lucid, fully illustrated account of African prehistory, from the origins of humanity to the time of European colonisation. Drawing on the latest archaeological research, Phillipson considers Egypt and North Africa in their African context, and comprehensively reviews the archaeology of West, East, Central and Southern Africa. The book demonstrates the relevance of archaeological research to an understanding of Africa today, and stresses the continent’s contribution to the cultural heritage of mankind.

Contents
1. Introduction; 2. The emergence of humankind in Africa; 3. The consolidation of basic human culture; 4. Regional diversification and specialisation; 5. The beginnings of permanent settlement; 6. Early farmers; 7. Iron-using peoples before 1000; 8. The second millennium AD in Sub-Saharan Africa; Bibliography.

Essential reading for upper undergraduate and graduate courses in African archaeology.
