Contents

Preface  ix

Introduction  1

Part I  Background  11
  1 Politics and technological excellence:  13
     Organic chemicals, 1860–1945
  2 Western German chemicals in flux, 1945–1951  40

Part II  Bargaining from strength: the political economy of technological change, 1949–1955  65
  3 A new agenda, 1949–1955: Cold War, changing energy patterns,  67
     and the development of West German chemical technology
  4 Rejoining the international community: international cooperation  109
     and technology transfer, 1951–1955
Table of Contents

Part III  Alternative paths to plenty: case studies from the mid-1950s

5 Fifty-fifty with the petroleum multinationals: BASF, Shell, and Rheinische Olefinwerke  131
6 Fifty-fifty with the petroleum multinationals: Bayer, British Petroleum, and Erdölchemie  133
7 Going it alone: Hoechst  154
8 State’s interest and technological change: Hüls and cold-rubber technology  176
9 End game strategies: the German coal industry and the Fischer-Tropsch process  197

Part IV  Consolidating the new regime, 1957–1961

10 Petrochemicals triumphant, 1957–1961  217
11 Conclusion  231

Index  233

244

253