Table of Contents

3.2.2 Situational variables 59
3.2.3 Situational inputs: a summary 69
3.3 Organizational role 70
3.4 Decision making frameworks 76
3.5 A brief appraisal of the first stage 81

4 The essential mathematics of inputs 85
4.1 Introduction 85
4.2 Threat perception 86
4.2.1 A simple example of threat perception 87
4.2.2 A formal definition of threat perception 90
4.2.3 A real-world example of threat perception 92
4.3 Perceived opportunities 95
4.3.1 A formal definition of perceived opportunities 96
4.3.2 How to preserve fruit? A simple example of perceived opportunities 97
4.3.3 Perceived opportunities in the Entebbe crisis 98
4.4 Time pressure 101
4.5 Decisional stress 102
4.5.1 Integrating motivational inputs 103
4.6 Decisional stress 105
4.6.1 Decisional stress in the Entebbe crisis 106
4.7 Perceived situational ambiguity 108
4.8 Cognitive complexity 113
4.8.1 Operational code approaches 114
4.8.2 Cognitive mapping and measures of cognitive complexity 116
4.8.3 Dimensions of cognitive complexity 124
4.8.4 The belief system of Henry Kissinger: substantive and structural dimensions 127
4.8.5 Comparing operational codes and cognitive mapping approaches 133
4.9 Formal structures of decision making bodies 135
4.9.1 Formal group structure in the Rabin government 145
4.10 Summary and conclusion 146

5 Models of the decision process 149
5.1 Introduction 149
5.2 The analytic (rational) model of decision 151
5.2.1 Individual choice 157
5.2.2 Group decision making 169
5.2.3 General criticism of the analytic model 177
Table of Contents

5.3 The cybernetic model of decision
- 5.3.1 Individual choice 178
- 5.3.2 Group decision making 188
- 5.3.3 Criticism of the cybernetic model 189
- 5.4 The cognitive model of decision
  - 5.4.1 Individual choice 190
  - 5.4.2 Group decision making 192
- 5.5 The bureaucratic politics model
  - 5.5.1 Individual choice 206
  - 5.5.2 Group decision making 212
- 5.6 Empirical evidence on the models
- 5.7 The stage of model-specification: an appraisal

6 A formal characterization of decision processes
- 6.1 Introduction 224
- 6.2 The Multiple Paths to Choice (MPC) framework
  - 6.2.1 General description 224
  - 6.3 The formal structure of the evaluation stage 224
- 6.4 Coping with uncertainty: formal aspects of intuitive prediction
  - 6.4.1 The logic of "probabilistic" language 237
- 6.5 Elements of choice
  - 6.5.1 Constructing integrated utilities 237
- 6.6 Collective decision making
  - 6.6.1 Group polarization 249
- 6.7 Individual power and group structure
  - 6.8 Characterizing group choices 250
  - 6.9 Summary 259

7 A theory of foreign policy decision making
- 7.1 Introduction 266
- 7.2 The stage of synthesis in foreign policy decision making
  - 7.2.1 Discriminating frameworks 267
  - 7.2.2 Integrating inputs and processes 269
  - 7.2.3 Integrating decision making and bargaining approaches
    - 7.3 Foreign policy decision making: an integrative framework 303
Table of Contents

7.3.1 General assumptions 314
7.4 Individual choice processes 317
7.5 Collective decision making 340
7.6 A logical and aesthetical assessment of the foreign policy decision theory 360
7.6.1 An assessment of the assumptions and propositions 362
7.6.2 Some difficulties in empirical research on political decision making 368
7.7 The merits and limitations of decision-related approaches to world politics 371
7.7.1 Contributions of decision making research 371
7.7.2 Limitations of decision making research: independent versus interdependent choice 373

8 The analysis of international outcomes 378
8.1 Introduction 378
8.2 Game-theoretic models of bargaining 379
8.2.1 Stability analysis and decision analysis in interdependent choice settings 387
8.2.2 Current trends in game theory 395
8.2.3 Applications of game theory to international politics 400
8.3 Psychological theories of bargaining 405
8.3.1 Psychological factors affecting bargaining outcomes 406
8.3.2 Applications of psychological approaches to international bargaining 409
8.4 National choices and international outcomes 411
8.4.1 Objective and subjective games: the 1973 Middle East crisis 413
8.4.2 Defining objective games and their solutions 418
8.4.3 Defining and characterizing subjective games 423
8.4.4 Structural and substantive misperceptions in the 1911 Agadir crisis 431
8.5 National choices and international consequences: a model 439
8.5.1 Aggregating national choices to international outcomes 440
8.5.2 Evaluating national choices 452
8.5.3 National choices and the collective adaptability of international outcomes 456
8.6 National choices and international outcomes: an assessment of the model 457
Table of Contents

9 The evolution of international processes 463
  9.1 Introduction 463
  9.2 Step-by-step international processes 464
  9.2.1 Outcome-discrepancies, attribution processes, and subsequent decisions 468
  9.2.2 Effects of outcome-discrepancies on situational variables 471
  9.2.3 Relations between national decisions over time 476
  9.2.4 Relations between international outcomes over time 482
  9.2.5 Israeli–Syrian crises, 1948–1985: an empirical illustration of the ad hoc approach 492
  9.3 The strategic perspective of international processes 499
  9.3.1 Classification of strategies 503
  9.3.2 Rules governing strategy selection and strategy change 507
  9.3.3 Strategies in international processes 510
  9.4 A comparative analysis of ad hoc and strategic perspectives of international processes 513
  9.4.1 The Hitler crises, 1933–1939: an empirical illustration of an international process 518
  9.5 Integrating ad hoc and strategic perspectives of international processes 528

10 Individual preferences, national choices, and international systems 531
  10.1 Introduction 531
  10.2 Summary of the theory of national choices and international processes 532
  10.3 Theoretical and practical implications of the theory of international processes 534
  10.3.1 Theoretical implications 535
  10.3.2 Practical implications 537
  10.4 Evaluation of the theory of international processes 540
  10.4.1 Complexity 541
  10.4.2 Imbalance in terms of theoretical emphases 544
  10.4.3 Imbalance in terms of levels of specificity 546
  10.5 International systems and international processes 547
  10.6 Future research on international processes 564
