Petrarch’s Humanism and the Care of the Self

Petrarch was one of the founding fathers of Renaissance humanism, yet the nature and significance of his ideas are still widely debated. In this book, Gur Zak examines two central issues in Petrarch's works – his humanist philosophy and his concept of the self. Zak argues that both are defined by Petrarch’s idea of care for the self. Overcome by a strong sense of fragmentation, Petrarch turned to the ancient idea that philosophy can bring harmony and wholeness to the soul through the use of spiritual exercises in the form of writing. Examining his vernacular poetry and his Latin works from both literary and historical perspectives, Zak explores Petrarch’s attempts to use writing as a spiritual exercise, how his spiritual techniques absorbed and transformed ancient and medieval traditions of writing, and the tensions that arose from his efforts to care for the self through writing.

Gur Zak is Lecturer in Comparative Literature at The Hebrew University of Jerusalem.
Petrarch’s Humanism and the Care of the Self

GUR ZAK

The Hebrew University of Jerusalem
For Dina
Contents

Acknowledgments ix

Introduction 1

1 The Indeterminate Self: Writing, Desire, and Temporality in Petrarch’s Rerum vulgarium fragmenta 23

2 The Crisis of the Narrative Self 54

3 Petrarch’s Humanism and the Ethics of Care of the Self 79

4 Ovid, Augustine, and the Limits of the Ethics of Care of the Self 121

Conclusion 158

Bibliography 163

Index 173
Acknowledgments

Writing a book is a long and solitary process, which would not be feasible without the support of continuous dialogues – both real and imaginary – with friends, colleagues, teachers, and family members. During my work on this book, I incurred debts to many such interlocutors, whom I am happy to have the opportunity to thank.

My greatest gratitude goes to my PhD advisor, Brian Stock, whose brilliance, erudition, and gentleness of character have been a source of inspiration to me as both a scholar and a human being. His stimulating writings, friendly conversations, and legendary seminars at the Pontifical Institute Library at the University of Toronto have contributed to my work more than anything else, and I am grateful for having had the opportunity to work with him. Lawrin Armstrong, Kenneth R. Bartlett, William Robbins, and David Townsend closely followed this project from its inception and helped me greatly in its development, and I would like to express my gratitude to all of them.

My sincere thanks also belong to Ronald G. Witt for his genuine support and insightful suggestions during my work on this project. Professor Witt’s scholarship has been a source of inspiration to me for a long time, and his interest in my work has given me much pride and encouragement. In addition, I wish to thank Timothy Kircher, an exemplary scholar and the best reader one can hope for. His honest and constructive criticism of parts of this book has contributed greatly to my thinking on Petrarch.

During my years at the University of Toronto, I had the privilege of being part of the vibrant and stimulating academic community of the Centre for Medieval Studies, and I am especially grateful to Suzanne Akbari, Grace Desa, Wendy Greyling, Jennifer Harris, Amilcare Iannucci, Brad Inwood, John Magee, Mark Meyerson, Andy Orchard, Jill Ross, and Nicholas Terpstra for making my time in Toronto so enriching and enjoyable. I also wish to thank Matthew Doyle, Ryan Greenwood, Jon Robinson, Jess Paelke, and Sarah Powrie for the many conversations, readings, and cappuccinos we have had together throughout these years. It was not a waste of time!
Acknowledgments

The completion of the work on this book was made possible by the Bernard Lewis Postdoctoral Fellowship from the Faculty of the Humanities at Tel-Aviv University, and I am grateful to the Faculty and the Department of History for their support. I particularly wish to thank Aviad Kleinberg of Tel-Aviv University, who first converted me to the study of the Middle Ages while I was still an undergraduate student and has continued ever since to inspire my work and open my mind to exciting new ways of looking at the past. Gadi Algazi, Benjamin Arbel, Miri Eliav-Feldon, Rivka Feldhai, Igal Halfin, Tamar Herzig, David Katz, Josef Mali, Irad Malkin, Yoav Rinon, Moshe Sluhovsky, and Michael Zakim have also provided me with much appreciated guidance and support. I am also grateful to Hanan Yoran of Ben Gurion University for his insightful readings of parts of this book, as well as for his committed friendship.

Finally, I wish to thank my parents, Aya and Uzi Zak, who, even though a bit puzzled at first by the fact that their son did not go to law school, grew eventually to show sincere and appreciative interest in my pursuits. Special thanks is also due to precious little Daniel and Naomi who often show me (with inspiring assertiveness) that there are more important things in life than writing.

And above all, my deepest and heartfelt thanks belong to my first reader, editor, and best friend, my wife Dina, who crossed an ocean with me twice, and truly made this book possible.