Bullying in Different Contexts

Bullying has a tendency to be associated with aggression between children in the playground, but bullying and abuse can also be observed in other social settings. Bullying in Different Contexts brings together, for the first time, leading international researchers to discuss these behaviours in a wide range of settings, including pre-school, school, the home, residential care, prisons, the workplace and cyberspace. The authors provide background to the different contexts and discuss the impact and types of interpersonal aggression and the characteristics of those involved. A final chapter collates the findings from each context to draw conclusions on the similarities and differences between the behaviours, risk factors for involvement and theoretical approaches to explain bullying. This original volume will further our understanding of bullying and inform preventative and intervention work. The authors seek to show how research from diverse settings may inform our understanding of the bullying phenomenon as a whole.

CLAIRE P. MONKS is a Senior Lecturer in Developmental Psychology and a member of the Research Centre for Children, Schools and Families at the University of Greenwich.

IAIN COYNE is an Associate Professor in Occupational Psychology in the Institute of Work, Health and Organisations at the University of Nottingham.

PARVEEN AZAM ALI is a PhD student and was awarded a coveted University of Sheffield studentship to research gender relations in the Pakistani household. Her work is being co-supervised by Paul Naylor.

CHRISTINE BARTER is an NSPCC senior research fellow at the School for Policy Studies, University of Bristol. She has published widely on a range of children's welfare issues and has also authored a number of methodological papers on including young people within social research. Christine undertook the first study on peer violence in residential children's homes. Her most recent research, the first in the UK, explored young people's experiences of partner exploitation and violence in their intimate relationships.

KATE BEAMER is a graduate student in the Department of Education at the University of Calgary, Canada. Her research interests centre on the education of undisclosed adolescent female child sexual abuse survivors using a hermeneutic model of narrative inquiry. She also works with Christine A. Walsh analysing research data on issues relating to women's poverty, homelessness and elder abuse.

THOMAS CHESNEY is a lecturer in Information Systems at Nottingham University Business School. He has a PhD in information systems from Brunel University, an MSc in informatics from Edinburgh University and a BSc in information management from the Queen's University of Belfast. He is a fellow of the Higher Education Academy. His research interests centre on technology adoption in the home, particularly socialising in virtual worlds.

GABRIELLE D'AOUST is completing a master's degree in social work at the University of Calgary, Canada. She has assisted with community-based research projects exploring issues affecting youth and older adults in Ontario and Alberta. Her current research interests include processes of forgiveness and reconciliation in post-conflict communities.

JANE L. IRELAND is a professor in forensic aggression research, chartered psychologist, forensic psychologist and chartered scientist and fellow of the International Society for Research on Aggression. She published the first book on prison bullying in 2002, followed by the first edited book on this topic in 2005 and is responsible for over 60 publications, the majority of which are on bullying- or aggression-related topics.

PAUL B. NAYLOR is a senior research fellow in the Institute for Health Services Effectiveness, Aston Business School, Aston University. Since taking up a research career 12 years ago he has published more than 20 book chapters, web articles and peer-reviewed journal articles. Most of this work has been on bullying amongst children and anti-bullying peer-support systems in school, but also addresses workplace bullying and interpersonal racism.

ROSARIO ORTEGA is a professor of psychology at the University of Cordoba, Spain. She has researched extensively into the causes and nature of interpersonal violence. She was director of two national projects (SAVE and ANDAVE) that created new models to prevent school bullying. She designed and co-ordinated the Educational Program for the Prevention of Bullying in Schools with the Andalusian government and is currently directing a project examining various forms of aggression and violence in Andalusian schools (VEA). She is a founding member of the European Observatory on Violence, the International Observatory, as well as the Observatory of Brazil and the Observatory of School Convivencia, recently created by the Spanish government. She has published numerous books and peer-reviewed journal articles in this area and has been an invited speaker at conferences as well as to government officials.

LAURIE PETCH is a chartered educational psychologist, lecturer and co-course director for the doctoral course in educational and child psychology at the University of Sheffield. He currently practises as an educational psychologist with a local authority in the north of England. Laurie's research interests centre on existential perspectives in applied educational psychology. His PhD examines school-based interventions for children with high anxiety.

IAN RIVERS is Professor of Human Development at Brunel University. He is the author of over 80 articles and book chapters dealing with various aspects of bullying behaviour, and particularly homophobic bullying in schools.
