Contents

Preface
ix
Acknowledgements
xi

1 Unemployment in Britain and its psychological and political consequences for the unemployed
1
1.1 The context: unemployment
1.2 Consequences of unemployment: the contribution of psychology
1.3 Consequences of unemployment: political responses of the unemployed
1.4 Conclusions
1.5 Summary

2 Youth, unemployment, and political views 24
2.1 Youth unemployment
2.2 Analyses of ‘youth’ and studies of youth cultures
2.3 Youth unemployment: psychological studies
2.4 Youth, unemployment, and politics: psychological studies
2.5 The domain of politics
2.6 The research issues
2.7 Summary

3 Theoretical and methodological frameworks 54
3.1 Introduction
3.2 The theoretical framework
3.3 Ideologies and social representations
3.4 The methodological framework
3.5 Summary and conclusions

4 The research study 77
4.1 Introduction
4.2 The pilot study and preliminary preparations
4.3 The field work
4.4 Sample characteristics
4.5 Conventions for presenting interview material
4.6 Sample representativeness

5 The domain of the political. I. Employment, unemployment, and youth training schemes 98
5.1 Introduction
5.2 Some general comments about employment

Table of Contents

Contents

5.3 Discussions about employment 103
5.4 Unemployment 117
5.5 The Youth Training Scheme 126
5.6 Summary and conclusions 136

6 The domain of the political. II. Democracy and voting, racism, and marriage 138
   6.1 Introduction 138
   6.2 Social representations of democracy and voting 139
   6.3 Racism and the interviews: an introduction 149
   6.4 Social representations and ‘marriage’ 162
   6.5 Summary and overview 172

7 Summary and issues for the future 176
   7.1 Summary 176
   7.2 Issues for the future 178

Appendix I 184
Appendix II 187
Bibliography 189
Index 202