John Astington brings the acting style of the Shakespearean period to life, describing and analysing the art of the player in the English professional theatre between Richard Tarlton and Thomas Betterton. The book pays close attention to the cultural context of stage playing, the critical language used about it, and the kinds of training and professional practice employed in the theatre at various times over the course of roughly 100 years – 1558-1660. Perfect for courses, this up-to-date survey takes into account recent discoveries about actors and their social networks, about apprenticeship and company affiliations, and about playing outside the major centre of theatre, London. Astington considers the educational tradition of playing, in schools, universities, legal inns and choral communities, in comparison to the work of the professional players. A comprehensive biographical dictionary of all major professional players of the Shakespearean period is included as a handy reference guide.

John H. Astington is Professor in the Department of English and the Graduate Centre for the Study of Drama at the University of Toronto. He is the author of English Court Theatre, 1558–1642 (Cambridge, 1999), and has published articles and chapters in many books and journals including The Cambridge Companion to Shakespeare, The Cambridge Shakespeare Library, The Oxford Handbook to Early Modern Theatre and The Oxford Dictionary of National Biography.
ACTORS AND ACTING IN SHAKESPEARE’S TIME

The Art of Stage Playing

JOHN H. ASTINGTON
Contents

List of illustrations  page vi
Acknowledgments  vii

Introduction: the purpose of playing  1
1  Shadows, jests, and counterfeits  12
2  Playing and education  38
3  Apprentices  76
4  Playing many parts  108
5  Players at work  140
6  Conclusion  174

Appendix: Principal actors 1558–1660  188
Notes  225
Bibliography  236
Index  242
Illustrations

2. Portrait of Richard Perkins, late 1640s. School of Gerard Soest, oil on canvas. Dulwich Picture Gallery 7
3. Apprenticeship indenture of John Risley to Thomas Havers, 1612. Print on vellum. British Library MS c.106.cc.3. © The British Library Board 81
6. Woodcut of Richard Tarlton performing a jig, 1613. The picture is possibly the same as that used on the stage as a property in 1589. By permission of the Folger Shakespeare Library 178
Acknowledgments

The preparation of any larger study draws on a long period of reading, thought, and conversation, the consequences of which are cumulative, and hard to disentangle retrospectively. I am grateful for the help, encouragement, and criticism of colleagues in the theatre history seminar of the Shakespeare Association of America over a long period, including those of people I can no longer thank in person: Tom King, Herb Berry, and Scott McMillin. In the immediate period of the planning and writing of this book I have been grateful for the help and advice of Catherine Belsey, Susan Cerasano, Roslyn Knutson, Lucy Munro, Roger Bowers, Alan Nelson, David Kathman, Chris Marusiak, Andrew Gurr, Lawrence Manley, Peter Blayney, Martin Butler, Helen Ostovich, Marta Straznicky, and Eva Griffith. I would like to thank David Beasley, Librarian of the Goldsmiths’ Company, Penelope Fussell, Archivist of the Drapers’ Company, and D. E. Wickham, Archivist of the Clothworkers’ Company, for their ready and courteous help in research matters. My own university granted me an administrative leave in 2007–8, during which much of my writing was done; I am grateful to the Master and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, for the award of a Visiting Fellowship during that period, allowing me to work in pleasant and supportive surroundings, the former haunts of Marlowe and Fletcher. Sarah Stanton of Cambridge University Press has provided steady encouragement and wise guidance of the project. To my wife Janet, who has endured my obsession, my thanks for her patience and support.