THE CAMBRIDGE BIBLE COMMENTARY
NEW ENGLISH BIBLE

GENERAL EDITORS
P. R. ACKROYD, A. R. C. LEANEY
J. W. PACKER

PSALMS 101-150
PSALMS 101–150

COMMENTARY BY

J. W. ROGERSON

Senior Lecturer in Theology, University of Durham

AND

J. W. McKay

Lecturer in Theology, University of Hull
Library of Congress cataloguing in publication data
(The Cambridge Bible commentary, New English Bible)
Includes bibliographies and indexes.

II. McKay, John William. II. Title. III. Series.
BN1430.3.R63 223'.2'077 76–27911
ISBN 0 521 21465 3 hard covers (Psalms 101–150)
ISBN 0 521 29162 3 paperback (Psalms 101–150)

Transferred to digital printing 1999
GENERAL EDITORS’ PREFACE

The aim of this series is to provide the text of the New English Bible closely linked to a commentary in which the results of modern scholarship are made available to the general reader. Teachers and young people have been especially kept in mind. The commentators have been asked to assume no specialized theological knowledge, and no knowledge of Greek and Hebrew. Bare references to other literature and multiple references to other parts of the Bible have been avoided. Actual quotations have been given as often as possible.

The completion of the New Testament part of the series in 1967 provides a basis upon which the production of the much larger Old Testament and Apocrypha series can be undertaken. The welcome accorded to the series has been an encouragement to the editors to follow the same general pattern, and an attempt has been made to take account of criticisms which have been offered. One necessary change is the inclusion of the translators’ footnotes since in the Old Testament these are more extensive, and essential for the understanding of the text.

Within the severe limits imposed by the size and scope of the series, each commentator will attempt to set out the main findings of recent biblical scholarship and to describe the historical background to the text. The main theological issues will also be critically discussed.

Much attention has been given to the form of the volumes. The aim is to produce books each of which will be read consecutively from first to last page. The introduction material leads naturally into the text, which itself leads into the alternating sections of the commentary.
GENERAL EDITORS’ PREFACE

The series is accompanied by three volumes of a more general character. Understanding the Old Testament sets out to provide the larger historical and archaeological background, to say something about the life and thought of the people of the Old Testament, and to answer the question ‘Why should we study the Old Testament?’. The Making of the Old Testament is concerned with the formation of the books of the Old Testament and Apocrypha in the context of the ancient Near Eastern world, and with the ways in which these books have come down to us in the life of the Jewish and Christian communities. Old Testament Illustrations contains maps, diagrams and photographs with an explanatory text. These three volumes are designed to provide material helpful to the understanding of the individual books and their commentaries, but they are also prepared so as to be of use quite independently.

P. R. A.
A. R. C. L.
J. W. P.

vi
CONTENTS

The footnotes to the N.E.B. text page x

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

Name, content and place of the book in the Old Testament 1
Psalm titles, authorship and growth of the Psalter 3
History of interpretation 6
The character of the N.E.B. translation 8
Literary and poetic characteristics of the psalms 10
The contents of the Psalter 13

* * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

Book 4 (cont.)
Psalm 101 15
Psalm 102 17
Psalm 103 22
Psalm 104 26
Psalm 105 33
Psalm 106 40

Book 5
Psalm 107 48
Psalm 108 55
Psalm 109 59
Psalm 110 65
Psalm 111 69
Psalm 112 71

vii
| Psalm 113 | page 73 |
| Psalm 114 | 74 |
| Psalm 115 | 76 |
| Psalm 116 | 79 |
| Psalm 117 | 82 |
| Psalm 118 | 83 |
| Psalm 119 | 89 |
| Psalm 120 | 113 |
| Psalm 121 | 115 |
| Psalm 122 | 117 |
| Psalm 123 | 119 |
| Psalm 124 | 120 |
| Psalm 125 | 121 |
| Psalm 126 | 123 |
| Psalm 127 | 125 |
| Psalm 128 | 127 |
| Psalm 129 | 129 |
| Psalm 130 | 131 |
| Psalm 131 | 134 |
| Psalm 132 | 135 |
| Psalm 133 | 140 |
| Psalm 134 | 141 |
| Psalm 135 | 142 |
| Psalm 136 | 146 |
| Psalm 137 | 149 |
| Psalm 138 | 152 |
| Psalm 139 | 154 |
CONTENTS

Psalm 140  page 159
Psalm 141  161
Psalm 142  165
Psalm 143  167
Psalm 144  171
Psalm 145  174
Psalm 146  177
Psalm 147  179
Psalm 148  183
Psalm 149  186
Psalm 150  188

* * * * * * * * * * * *

A NOTE ON FURTHER READING  190

INDEX  191
THE FOOTNOTES TO THE N.E.B. TEXT

The footnotes to the N.E.B. text are designed to help the reader either to understand particular points of detail – the meaning of a name, the presence of a play upon words – or to give information about the actual text. Where the Hebrew text appears to be erroneous, or there is doubt about its precise meaning, it may be necessary to turn to manuscripts which offer a different wording, or to ancient translations of the text which may suggest a better reading, or to offer a new explanation based upon conjecture. In such cases, the footnotes supply very briefly an indication of the evidence, and whether the solution proposed is one that is regarded as possible or as probable. Various abbreviations are used in the footnotes:

(1) Some abbreviations are simply of terms used in explaining a point: ch(s), chapter(s); cp., compare; lit., literally; mng., meaning; MS(S), manuscript(s), i.e. Hebrew manuscript(s), unless otherwise stated; om., omit(s); or, indicating an alternative interpretation; poss., possible; prob., probable; rdg., reading; Vs(s), version(s).

(2) Other abbreviations indicate sources of information from which better interpretations or readings may be obtained.

Aq. Aquila, a Greek translator of the Old Testament (perhaps about A.D. 130) characterized by great literalness.

Aram. Aramaic – may refer to the text in this language (used in parts of Ezra and Daniel), or to the meaning of an Aramaic word. Aramaic belongs to the same language family as Hebrew, and is known from about 1000 B.C. over a wide area of the Middle East, including Palestine.

Heb. Hebrew – may refer to the Hebrew text or may indicate the literal meaning of the Hebrew word.

Josephus Flavius Josephus (A.D. 37/8–about 100), author of the Jewish Antiquities, a survey of the whole history of his people, directed partly at least to a non-Jewish audience, and of various other works, notably one on the Jewish War (that of A.D. 66–73) and a defence of Judaism (Against Apion).

Luc. Sept. Lucian’s recension of the Septuagint, an important edition made in Antioch in Syria about the end of the third century A.D.

Pesh. Peshitta or Peshitto, the Syriac version of the Old Testament. Syriac is the name given chiefly to a form of Eastern Aramaic used by the Christian community. The translation varies in quality, and is at many points influenced by the Septuagint or the Targums.
FOOTNOTES TO THE N.E.B. TEXT

Samaritan Pentateuch – the form of the first five books of the Old Testament as used by the Samaritan community. It is written in Hebrew in a special form of the Old Hebrew script, and preserves an important form of the text, somewhat influenced by Samaritan ideas.

Scroll(s) – Scroll(s), commonly called the Dead Sea Scrolls, found at or near Qumran from 1947 onwards. These important manuscripts shed light on the state of the Hebrew text as it was developing in the last centuries B.C. and the first century A.D.

Septuagint (meaning ‘seventy’; often abbreviated as the Roman numeral LXX), the name given to the main Greek version of the Old Testament. According to tradition, the Pentateuch was translated in Egypt in the third century B.C. by 70 (or 72) translators, six from each tribe, but the precise nature of its origin and development is not fully known. It was intended to provide Greek-speaking Jews with a convenient translation. Subsequently it came to be much revered by the Christian community.

Symmachus, another Greek translator of the Old Testament (beginning of the third century A.D.), who tried to combine literalness with good style. Both Lucian and Jerome viewed his version with favour.

Targum, a name given to various Aramaic versions of the Old Testament, produced over a long period and eventually standardized, for the use of Aramaic-speaking Jews.

Theodotion, the author of a revision of the Septuagint (probably second century A.D.), very dependent on the Hebrew text.

Vulgate, the most important Latin version of the Old Testament, produced by Jerome about A.D. 400, and the text most used throughout the Middle Ages in western Christianity.

[...] In the text itself square brackets are used to indicate probably late additions to the Hebrew text.

(Fuller discussion of a number of these points may be found in The Making of the Old Testament in this series.)