The Center is the “living memorial” of the United States of America to the nation’s twenty-eighth president, Woodrow Wilson. The U.S. Congress established the Woodrow Wilson Center in 1968 as an international institute for advanced study, “symbolizing and strengthening the fruitful relationship between the world of learning and the world of public affairs.” The Center opened in 1970 under its own presidentially appointed board of trustees.

In all its activities the Woodrow Wilson Center is a nonprofit, nonpartisan organization, supported financially by annual appropriations from the U.S. Congress and contributions from foundations, corporations, and individuals. Conclusions or opinions expressed in Center publications are those of the authors and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Center staff, fellows, trustees, advisory groups, or any individuals or organizations that provide financial support to the Center.

This volume contains four chapters that were initially papers presented at a conference held at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars on September 25–26, 1986. Much, of course, has changed since then, and these essays have been revised substantially. The conference, though, was a particularly stimulating one, and the discussion held then was important for each of the authors whose work is presented here. Special thanks are due to these participants in the conference: James H. Billington, W. Raymond Duncan, Herbert J. Ellison, Raymond L. Gart-hoff, Thomas Hammond, Paul Henze, Robert Leiken, Robert Litwak, Rajan Menon, David B. Ottaway, Daniel S. Papp, Gareth Porter, Karen L. Puschel, Peter Reddaway, Stephen Sestanovich, Shirin Tahir-Kheli, William J. Taylor, and Samuel F. Wells, Jr. A particularly strong contribution to the conference was made by Robert E. Osgood, who died shortly afterward.

I am grateful for the support I received from past and present staff members of the Kennan Institute for Advanced Russian Studies and of the Woodrow Wilson Center for their help in organizing the conference as well as in seeing this book through to publication. Funds for the conference and the publication of this volume were provided by a federal appropriation to the Woodrow Wilson Center by the U.S. Congress, by a grant from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, and by a grant from the Smith-Richardson Foundation.
