Artisans in Europe, 1300–1914

This book is a survey of the history of work in general and of European urban artisans in particular, from the late Middle Ages to the era of industrialization. Unlike traditional histories of work and craftsmen, this book offers a multifaceted understanding of artisan experience situated in the artisans' culture. It treats economic and institutional topics, but also devotes considerable attention to the changing ideologies of work, the role of government regulation in the world of work, the social history of craftspeople, the artisan in rebellion against the various authorities in his world, and the ceremonial and leisure life of artisans. Women, masters, journeymen, apprentices, and nonguild workers all received substantial treatment. The book concludes with a chapter on the nineteenth century, examining the transformation of artisan culture, exploring how and why the early modern craftsman became the industrial wage-worker, mechanic, or shopkeeper of the modern age.

JAMES R. FARR is Professor of History at Purdue University, West Lafayette, Indiana. He is a specialist in French history and the history of work, and has published Hands of Honour: Artisans and their World in Dijon, 1550–1650 (1988) and Authority and Sexuality in Burgundy, 1550–1730 (1995).

NEW APPROACHES TO EUROPEAN HISTORY

Series editors

WILLIAM BEIK Emory University

T. C. W. BLANNING Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge

New Approaches to European History is an important textbook series, which provides concise but authoritative surveys of major themes and problems in European history since the Renaissance. Written at a level and length accessible to advanced school students and undergraduates, each book in the series addresses topics or themes that students of European history encounter daily: the series embraces both some of the more “traditional” subjects of study, and those cultural and social issues to which increasing numbers of school and college courses are devoted. A particular effort is made to consider the wider international implications of the subject under scrutiny.

To aid the student reader scholarly apparatus and annotation is light, but each work has full supplementary bibliographies and notes for further reading: where appropriate chronologies, maps, diagrams, and other illustrative material are also provided.

For a list of titles published in the series, please see end of book.

Acknowledgments

Although this book carries my name as the sole author, no work of history stands alone. In the last decade or so there has been an outpouring of publications on Europe's artisans before 1900. Most of this literature centers on the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, but enough exists on the late medieval and early modern period that a book like this can be written. This was decidedly not the case scarcely fifteen years ago. I am, therefore, first and foremost indebted to the scores of authors who, while I was working on my monograph on Dijon's artisans in the early 1980s, were working silently on the multifaceted artisanal experience in many other European towns and cities. The fruits of their labor I have harvested in this survey, although, of course, I alone bear the responsibility for how I have woven their findings into my own interpretation – reflecting a “new approach,” to invoke the title of the series in which this book appears – of the meaning and cultural significance of this collective experience.

I also owe deep debts of gratitude to several scholars who graciously read drafts of the manuscript, sometimes more than once, and who generously offered bibliographic suggestions. Without the criticism and fruitful suggestions of Steve Kaplan, Gail Bossenga, Len Rosenband, Chris Friedrichs, Phil Benedict, and Jim Amelang, this book, whatever its current merits, would have been distinctly inferior. Several institutions have likewise contributed to this project. I warmly thank the American Council of Learned Societies and the Shelby Cullom Davis Center at Princeton University for their generous support.

Finally, I thank my mother, Mary Margaret Farr. She has always carried an almost mystical veneration for the past within her, and no doubt on those family vacations of my youth when historical sites and monuments constantly dotted our itineraries, she instilled in me an appreciation of the connectedness between the present and the past, between the living and the dead.
