Contents

Series foreword
Preface
Contributors

1. Introduction
   Laura Martin, Katherine Nelson, and Ethel Tobach

Part I  History and culture

2. Situated theory as a bridge between psychology, history, and educational practices
   Robert Serpell

3. The uniqueness of human labor
   Ethel Tobach

4. Reflecting on Russian consciousness
   Jerome Bruner

Part II  Doing psychology

5. Opening vistas for cognitive psychology
   William Hirst and David Manier

6. Analysis of developmental processes in sociocultural activity
   Barbara Rogoff, Barbara Radziszewska, and Tracy Masiello

7. Linking thought and setting in the study of workplace learning
   Laura M. W. Martin
Contents

8 Cultural–historical psychology:
   A meso-genetic approach
   Michael Cole
   168

9 The abstract and the concrete
   Rachel Joffe Falmagne
   205

10 From spontaneous to scientific concepts:
   Continuities and discontinuities from childhood to adulthood
   Katherine Nelson
   229

11 The psychology of Japanese literacy:
   Expanding “the practice account”
   Giyoo Hatano
   250

12 Voices of thinking and speaking
   James V. Wertsch, Fran Hagstrom, and Eve Kikas
   276

Part IV Activity in work and school

13 The qualitative analysis of the development of a child’s theoretical knowledge and thinking
   Mariane Hedegaard
   293

14 Innovative organizational learning in medical and legal settings
   Yrjö Engeström
   326

15 Intellectual and manual labor: Implications for developmental theory
   Joseph Glick
   357

16 Visionary realism, lifespan discretionary time,
   and the evolving role of work
   Howard E. Gruber
   383

Index
   405