

Contents

List of illustrations	page vii
Acknowledgments	viii
1 Criminal women: on bodies, paradoxes, performances and tales	1
A game in the dark: the principle of paradox	1
The gender of crime: testimonies	5
In the hall of mirrors: theories of investigation	12
Searching the scene of the crime: modus operandi	17
2 The evil eye: witches	20
When looks could kill: the case of Anna Göldi (Glarus, 1782)	21
The blue-eyed monster: case studies of Anna Louisa Karsch (1775–1858)	33
3 The plague: vampires	43
Outbreak: Serbian vampires come to life in Germany (Leipzig and Vienna, 1732–1755)	43
What is at stake, or why we cannot let it (them) rest	51
Bloodbaths: the case of Elizabeth Báthory (born 1560, sentenced 1611, died 1614, returned from the grave from 1729 on)	54
Containment: female vampires in literature from Goethe to the Grimms (1797–1823)	71
4 Pride: husband-killers	82
Murderous marriages and marriage as murder	82
The case of Maria Katharina Wächtler (Hamburg, 1786–1788) and the debate on torture	86
The case of Christiane Ruthardt (Stuttgart, 1844–1845) and the death-penalty debate	105
The ethical mandate and the aesthetics of horror	115

vi	Contents
5	Shame: child-killers	121
	Women as children, women as child-killers: poetic images (1770–1790)	121
	‘Public whores’ and ‘honourable women’: philosophical and legal issues (1760–1800)	133
	Criminals of lost honour? The cases of Dorothea Altwein and Johanna Catharina Höhn (Weimar, 1781 and 1783)	141
6	The female self: poisoners	154
	The self-evident and evidence: criminologists and psychologists on poison and gender	154
	Self-delusion: literati, lawyers and physicians on poison and class	158
	Selfishness and selflessness: the case of Gesche Gottfried (Bremen, 1815–1831)	166
	Self-assertion: Chamisso’s Gesche Gottfried (1828)	182
7	The end: the etiquette of execution	187
	Final scenes: willing confessions, good deaths and grateful corpses	190
	Final thoughts: the power of the people, the gender of the mob and the progress of civilisation	212
	Works cited	220
	Index	260