Northeast Asia's Stunted Regionalism

Bilateral Distrust in the Shadow of Globalization

This book paints a comprehensive picture of the pursuit of regionalism across Northeast Asia in the fifteen years following the cold war. In each of six periods, it identifies the main dynamic of regionalism and the problems that slowed regionalism’s advance. It examines the evolving strategies of four countries – China, Japan, South Korea, and Russia – emphasizing the importance of bilateral relations while keeping in mind the globalizing U.S. role. By focusing on debates in each country, most of which have been little covered in English, the book demonstrates how suspicious neighbors and clashing strategies have undermined aspirations for regionalism. While false starts keep giving way to fresh hopes, only by learning the lessons of this transitional era will regionalism be placed on a stable footing. These include embracing globalization more fully while using regionalism for balance, working together in integrating North Korea while recognizing South Korea’s pivotal role, compromising to allow China and Japan to share leadership, and focusing on a long-term vision of Northeast Asia.

Gilbert Rozman is Musgrave Professor of Sociology at Princeton University. He is the author or editor of many books, including Japan and Russia: The Tortuous Path to Normalization, 1949–1999 (2000).
Northeast Asia’s Stunted Regionalism

Bilateral Distrust in the Shadow of Globalization

GILBERT ROZMAN

Princeton University
Contents

Acknowledgments v
Map viii

1 Introduction: The Challenge of the Northeast Asia Region 1
2 Exiting the 1980s: Cold War Logic and National Aspirations 21
4 1994–1996: Civilizational Bridges and Historical Distrust 127
5 1997–1998: Strategic Partnerships and National Rivalries 174
6 1999–2000: Sunshine Policy and Security Dilemmas 228
7 2001–2003: Unilateralism and Irrepressible Regionalism 288
8 Conclusion: Lessons for Constructing Regionalism in Northeast Asia 351

Index 381
Acknowledgments

There have been countless acts of kindness over the course of this decade-long project. I hope that the appearance of this book will, in some small way, serve as repayment for those who believed in the undertaking. Hundreds of academic researchers and state officials have generously shared their thinking with me and helped me to locate materials during my frequent visits to the region. Of these, I owe the greatest debt to Iwaki Shigeyuki of the National Diet Library for his unstinting support of my research on Japan and regionalism. He sets the highest standards for comprehensive research on foreign policy and has prodded me to raise my own. I am grateful also to Li Jingjie of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and Tamara Troyakova of the Far Eastern Branch of the Russian Academy for their repeated assistance in travel and material collection. The many others in the region who helped must go unrecognized, but not unappreciated.

Research began with grants from the Committee on Scholarly Communication with the PRC and the Chiang Ching-kuo Foundation in 1992–3. It continued with awards from the United States Institute of Peace and the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars, where I was a Fellow in 1996–7. The National Council for Eurasian and Eastern European Research funded related research on Russian ties to China and Korea. I am thankful to all of these organizations for facilitating my research trips and the time I spent reading and writing. Of course, only I am responsible for the contents and the incessantly widened scope of a book that was drawn together from smaller projects.
Northeast Asia’s Stunted Regionalism

Bilateral Distrust in the Shadow of Globalization