Contents

Preface and Acknowledgments
ix

1. An Introduction to Logical Empiricism and the Unity of Science Movement in the Cold War
   1

2. Otto Neurath, Charles Morris, Rudolf Carnap, and Philipp Frank: Political Philosophers of Science
   27

3. Leftist Philosophy of Science in America and the Reception of Logical Empiricism in New York City
   57

   83

5. Red Philosophy of Science: Blumberg, Malisoff, Somerville, and Early Philosophy of Science
   96

6. The View from the Left: Logical Empiricism and Radical Philosophers
   118

7. The View from the Far Left: Logical Empiricism and Communist Philosophers
   136

8. Postwar Disillusionment, Anti-Intellectualism, and the Values Debate
   149

9. Horace Kallen’s Attack on the Unity of Science
   167

10. Creeping Totalitarianism, Creeping Scholasticism: Neurath, Frank, and the Trouble with Semantics
    191

11. Frank’s Neurathian Crusade: Science, Enlightenment, and Values
    208
Contents

12 “A Very Fertile Field for Investigation”: Anticollectivism and Anticommunism in Popular and Academic Culture 234
13 Anticommmunist Investigations, Loyalty Oaths, and the Wrath of Sidney Hook 259
14 Competing Programs for Postwar Philosophy of Science 283
15 Freedom Celebrated: The Professional Decline of Philipp Frank and the Unity of Science Movement 307
16 The Marginalization of Charles Morris 331
17 Values, Axioms, and the Icy Slopes of Logic 344
18 Professionalism, Power, and What Might Have Been 369

References 389
Index 407