Hollywood Censored examines how hundreds of films – Mae West comedies, serious dramas, and films with a social message – were censored and often edited to promote a conservative political agenda during the golden era of studio production in the 1930s. After a series of sex scandals rocked the movie industry in 1922, the Hollywood moguls hired Will Hays to clean the image of movies. As movie “czar,” Hays tried a variety of ways to regulate films before adopting a formal code. Written in 1930 by a St. Louis priest and a Catholic layman, the Production Code stipulated that movies stress proper behavior, respect for government, and “Christian values” – thereby challenging the moguls’ staunch belief that movies entertain, not preach morality.

The Catholic Church further reinforced these efforts by launching its Legion of Decency in 1934. Intended to force Hays and Hollywood to censor movies more rigorously, the Legion engineered the appointment of Joseph Breen as head of the Production Code Administration. For the next three decades, Breen, Hays, and the Catholic Legion of Decency virtually controlled the content of all Hollywood films.

Recounting one of the most fascinating eras of Hollywood, Hollywood Censored is based on an extensive survey of original studio records, censorship files, and Legion archives.
Cambridge Studies in the History of Mass Communications

Series Editors
Kenneth Short, University of Houston
Garth Jowett, University of Houston

Other books in the series
Cinema and Soviet Society, 1917–1953, by Peter Kenez

Cambridge Studies in the History of Mass Communications includes books that examine the communications processes and communications systems within social, cultural, and political contexts. Inclusive of empirical, effects-based research, works in this series proceed from the basis that the histories of various media are an important means to understanding their role and function in society. The history of a medium – its pattern of introduction, diffusion, acceptance, and effects – varies in each society, interacting with and, in turn, shaping its culture. Moreover, each society reacts differently to the introduction of a medium, and regulatory policies are shaped by both political and cultural forces. The detailed study of various communications forms and their complex message systems is now understood to be the key to unraveling the evolution of modern society and its culture.
HOLLYWOOD CENSORED
Morality Codes, Catholics, and the Movies

Gregory D. Black
University of Missouri–Kansas City
To Gaylord Marr, teacher
CONTENTS

List of Illustrations viii
Acknowledgments ix

Introduction 1
1 Restricting Entertainment: The Movies Censored 3
2 The Hays Office and a Moral Code for the Movies 21
3 Sex, Sex, and More Sex 50
4 Movies and Modern Literature 84
5 Beer, Blood, and Politics 107
6 Legions March on Hollywood 149
7 Sex with a Dash of Moral Compensation 198
8 Film Politics and Industry Policy 244
9 Conclusion 292

Appendixes
A Working Draft of the Lord–Quigley Code Proposal 302
B Films Condemned by the Legion of Decency 309

Selected Bibliography 311
Filmography 321
Index 327
ILLUSTRATIONS

1. Kay Johnson and Reginald Denny in Madame Satan 59
2. Fredric March and Claudette Colbert in Cecil B. DeMille’s The Sign of the Cross 67
3. Cary Grant and Mae West in She Done Him Wrong 77
5. Edward G. Robinson in Little Caesar 113
6. Walter Huston and Karen Morley in Gabriel Over the White House 143
7. Will Hays, President of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and Paramount’s Jesse Lasky 155
8. The Legion of Decency’s Bishop John Cantwell 165
10. Nana, with Anna Sten and Mae Clarke 205
11. Greta Garbo and Basil Rathbone in MGM’s Anna Karenina 215
12. Tilly Losch’s dance of temptation for Charles Boyer in David O. Selznick’s The Garden of Allah 235
13. Paul Muni threatens to blow up the mine in Black Fury 259
14. Claude Rains stars in Mervyn Le Roy’s courtroom drama They Won’t Forget 273
15. Joel McCrea, Huntz Hall, and Humphrey Bogart in Samuel Goldwyn’s Dead End 279
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Few books are written in the solitary confines of the author’s study; this one certainly was not, and I would like to thank those who played a part in its creation. First, I thank the University of Missouri Research Board for the support it gave me by providing research funds for travel to distant archives and allowing me the time to write this book.

Historians could not function without archivists who preserve the written records from which we interpret the past. I am especially indebted to the following people:

Sam Gill and the staff at the Margaret Herrick Library of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Beverly Hills, California, for help with the Production Code Administration files;
Ned Constock at the Doheny Library of the University of Southern California for his help with MGM production files;
Jerry Gibson and his staff at the Library of Congress Motion Picture Division;
Msgr. Francis J. Weber of the Archives of the Archdiocese of Los Angeles;
the staff of the Jesuit Missouri Province Archives in St. Louis, Missouri;
Don Buske, Archivist of the Archives of the Archdiocese of Cincinnati;
H. Warren Willis, Archivist of the United Catholic Conference in Washington, D.C.; Nicholas B. Scheetz, Manuscripts Librarian of Georgetown University; and Mary Corliss and Terry Geesken of the Museum of Modern Art.

My research assistant, Siew Ang, spent countless hours in the library tracing obscure articles, reading microfilm, organizing data, and helping me think about this project. I thank her for all her help and support. Two friends, Chuck Bishop and Doug Schlosser, also contributed in important ways to the final product.

A number of people read the manuscript at various stages and saved me serious embarrassment. I thank Ted Wilson, Garth Jowett, Kenneth Short, Tom Poe, and Clayton Koppes for their encouragement.
Acknowledgments

and support. At Cambridge University Press my editor, Beatrice Rehl, and production editor, Michael Gnat, were a pleasure to work with.

My friend and colleague Richard McKinzie was especially supportive. We talked for hours about the book, and he forced me to consider areas that I often ignored. He read the manuscript at various stages and had a profound influence on my thinking. Tragically, Dick died during the last stages of the book. It is a great personal loss for me, for UMKC, for his wife Eileen and son Robbie, and for the historical profession as a whole.

A second colleague who played a major role in the construction of the book is Gaylord Marr, Curator of the Marr Sound Archives at the University of Missouri-Kansas City and a Professor of Communication Studies at UMKC. He is also one of the most knowledgeable persons I know on American popular culture. Dick McKinzie, Gaylord, and I spent many an afternoon hoisting a few and talking about movies and popular culture. Gaylord provided Dick and myself with countless recordings from his private collection for our research and our teaching. Dick encouraged me to dedicate this book to Gaylord for years of support and patience with us, and I do so with great pleasure.

Finally, I want to thank my wife Carol and son Jason. Carol has read more about and suffered through more old films than she ever wanted to. She is an excellent editor and critic, and I thank her for her understanding and patience.