

Contents

Note on the text	xi
Acknowledgments	xii
 Introduction	 I
 1 James’s radically empiricist Weltanschauung	 9
Radical empiricism: a philosophy of pure experience	10
The methodological thesis of radical empiricism	14
The factual thesis of radical empiricism	18
The metaphysical thesis of pure experience	23
The functional account of direct acquaintance	31
The functional account of knowledge about	43
The pragmatic conception of truth	48
The thesis of pluralistic panpsychism	57
Concluding remarks	59
 2 From psychology to religion: pure experience and radical empiricism in the 1890s	 61
Psychology as a natural science	63
James’s shifting interest: from psychology into metaphysics	71
“The knowing of things together”: the formal break with dualism	73
Pure experience, the field theory, and the 1895–6 seminar “The Feelings”	82
Pure experience and Richard Avenarius	83
The field theory	87
Concluding remarks	95

x	Contents
3	The Varieties of Religious Experience : indications of a philosophy adapted to normal religious needs	97
	Spiritual visions and bodily limitations:
	the composition of Varieties	98
	Remnants of the plan for the philosophical course	106
	Varieties : the basic argument	110
	Method and procedure	111
	Hypothetical beginnings	116
	Descriptions of the life of religion	119
	James's model of religion in act	126
	Varieties and radical empiricism	138
4	Squaring logic and life: making philosophy intimate in A Pluralistic Universe	146
	From Varieties to A Pluralistic Universe	147
	Adequate philosophy: intimacy, foreignness, and rationality	151
	The arguments against the absolute	162
	The problem of the compounding of consciousness	172
	Pluralistic panpsychism	185
	Superhuman consciousness and the finite God	196
5	Estimations and anticipations	203
	James and truth	205
	Realism or antirealism?	209
	Absolute truth	215
	Anticipations	223
	Philosophy	225
	Philosophy of religion	229
	Theology	235
	Select bibliography	242
	Index	248