This volume guides beginning students of rabbinic literature through the range of historical-interpretive and culture-critical issues that contemporary scholars use when studying the rabbinic texts of Late Antiquity. The editors, themselves well-known interpreters of rabbinic literature, have gathered an international collection of scholars to support students’ initial steps in confronting the enormous and complex rabbinic corpus. Unlike other introductions to rabbinic writings, the present volume includes approaches shaped by anthropology, gender studies, oral-traditional studies, classics, and folklore studies.

Charlotte Elisheva Fonrobert is the author of Menstrual Purity: Rabbinic and Christian Reconstructions of Biblical Gender (2000), which won the Salo Baron Prize for a best first book in Jewish Studies of that year and was one of three finalists for the National Jewish Book Award.

Martin S. Jaffee is the author of Torah in the Mouth: Writing and Oral Tradition in Palestinian Judaism, 200 B.C.E–400 C.E. (2001); Early Judaism: Religious Worlds of the First Judaic Millennium (2nd ed., 2006); and several volumes of rabbinic translation and commentary. He is currently coeditor of the AJS Review.
This is a series of companions to major topics and key figures in theology and religious studies. Each volume contains specially commissioned chapters by international scholars that provide an accessible and stimulating introduction to the subject for new readers and nonspecialists.

Contributors

Elizabeth Shanks Alexander is Assistant Professor in the Department of Religious Studies at the University of Virginia. Her research interests include the oral character of rabbinic texts. She has just begun work on the development of gender in rabbinic law.

Daniel Boyarin is the Hermann P. and Sophia Taubman Professor of Talmudic Culture in the Departments of Near Eastern Studies and Rhetoric, University of California at Berkeley. His interests include the relationship between Judaism and Christianity in Late Antiquity, as well as conceptions of sexuality in Late Antique culture.

Shaye J. D. Cohen is Littauer Professor of Hebrew Language and Literature at Harvard University. He is interested in the history of Jewish identity and has just begun work on a history of rabbinic law.

Yaakov Elman is Professor of Judaic Studies at Yeshiva University. His interests include the intellectual and cultural history of Late Antiquity and the history of biblical exegesis.

Charlotte Elisheva Fonrobert is Associate Professor of Religious Studies at Stanford University. She teaches the history and culture of rabbinic Judaism and studies the dynamics of gender in rabbinic culture, in particular rabbinic thinking about the human body, as well as rabbinic conceptions of space in connection with formations of Jewish identity.

Steven D. Fraade is the Mark Taper Professor of the History of Judaism at Yale University. He teaches the history and literature of Late Second Temple and early rabbinic Judaism.

Isaiah Gafni is the Sol Rosenbloom Professor of Jewish History at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem and Chair of the Mandel Institute of Jewish Studies. His areas of recent research include rabbinic Judaism and rabbinic portrayals of the past as expressions of self-identity, frameworks, and authority structures of the Jewish community in Late Antiquity, as well as the Jewish Diaspora and its links with the Land of Israel in Second Temple and post-Temple times.
Contributors

Galit Hasan-Rokem is the Max and Margarethe Grunwald Professor of Folklore, Department of Hebrew Literature and the Jewish and Comparative Folklore Program, Mandel Institute for Jewish Studies, Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Her areas of specialization include hermeneutical and comparative aspects of folk literary production, especially in classical rabbinic culture, as well as Proverbs and riddles.

Christine Hayes is the Robert F. and Patricia R. Weis Professor of Religious Studies in Classical Judaica in the Department of Religious Studies at Yale University. She has written about the relationship between the Palestinian and the Babylonian Talmud, as well as Jewish perceptions of non-Jews in Late Antique Jewish literature.

Catherine Hezser is Professor of Rabbinic Judaism in the Department of the Study of Religions at the University of London. Her research centers on the social history of Jews in Late Antique Roman Palestine, particular in the context of early Greco-Roman and early Christian society.

Martin S. Jaffee is Professor of Comparative Religion at the Henry M. Jackson School of International Studies, University of Washington in Seattle. His research interests include the relationship between orality and textuality in rabbinic literature, as well as the relationship among Judaism, Christianity, and Islam.

Jeffrey L. Rubenstein is Professor of Hebrew and Judaic Studies in the Skirball Department of Hebrew and Judaic Studies at New York University. His interests include rabbinic stories, the history of Jewish law, the culture of the Babylonian Talmud, and Jewish ethics.

Jonathan Wyn Schofer is Assistant Professor of Comparative Ethics at the Harvard Divinity School. His research centers on rabbinic ethics and self-cultivation.

Seth Schwartz is the Gerson D. Cohen Professor of Rabbinic Culture and Professor of History at The Jewish Theological Seminary. He has written about the influence of Roman imperialism on the political, social, and economic developments of Jewish life in late ancient Palestine.

Michael D. Swartz is Professor of Hebrew and Religious Studies at the Ohio State University. He has written on Jewish mysticism, magic, liturgy, and ritual in Late Antiquity.
The editors wish, first and foremost, to thank Ms. Phyllis Berk, of Howard Berk Associates, who took extraordinary pains to edit a very complex manuscript and prepare it for press. Her patience and good humor always encouraged us to propose improvements as they suggested themselves to us; and her eagle eye for consistency in citation and transliteration have spared us many embarrassments. Needless to say, any remaining inconsistencies in the final product are the sole responsibility of the editors. We also owe a great debt of thanks to Ms. Claire Sufrin, a doctoral student at Stanford University, for invaluable assistance in preparing the glossary and the index.

Professor Fonrobert, in particular, would like to thank the Stanford Humanities Center for the research fellowship in 2004–05, which enabled her to do a significant portion of the preparatory work for this volume and to absorb many costs involved with preparing the manuscript for submission to the Press.

For his part, Professor Jaffee wishes to thank three individuals without whom his contribution to this volume would certainly have suffered. First, he acknowledges his wife and closest friend, Charla Soriano Jaffee, whose companionship and moral support have afforded him the security and peace of mind to pursue this and other projects. Secondly, he gladly acknowledges a great debt to his Talmud study-partner, Dr. Shlomo Goldberg of Seattle. Their friendship, renewed each dawn in the study of Mishnah and each Sabbath in the study of Talmud, has taught Professor Jaffee what it means to study Torah with one’s entire being, from the critical intellect to the mysterious symbolic representations that bubble up from the subconscious mind. Finally, during the entire span of this project, Professor Jaffee has benefited enormously from the daily study of a page of Talmud (daf yomi shi’ur) conducted by Rabbi Moshe Kletenik of Seattle’s Congregation Bikur Cholim-Machzikay Hadas. Professor Jaffee’s training in rabbinic studies has taken place exclusively in the academic milieu of historical-literary criticism. Therefore, it has been a revelation to witness the breadth of textual knowledge, acuteness of literary analysis, and encyclopedic mastery of the entire tradition of medieval and modern Talmudic exegesis commanded by an exemplary contemporary talmid hakham, as embodied in the person of Rabbi Kletenik.

Brief Time Line of Rabbinic Literature

Late Second Temple Period (ca. 200 B.C.E.–70 C.E.)

200: Temple-state of Judaea passes from Egyptian Ptolemaic to Syrian Seleucid control.

ca. 180: The scribe Yeshua b. Sira describes the Temple cult administered by the High Priest, Simon (Wisdom of ben Sira 50: 1ff.). This Simon is probably the figure recalled in Mishnah Avot 1:2 as Shimon the Righteous, “a remnant of the Great Assembly,” the first named figure in the post-biblical period identified as a tradent of Torah received from Moses at Sinai.

167–152: The Maccabean uprising against the Seleucids and consolidation of Hasmonean rule

152–63: Hasmonean Dynasty

ca. 152–140: The anonymous author of the “Halakhic Letter” (found among the Dead Sea Scrolls: 4QMMT) refers to disputes regarding cultic purity ascribed in the Mishnah (Yadayim 4:6–7) to the Sadducees and Pharisees.

134–104: Reign of John Hyrcanus

Emergence of Pharisees as proponents of “traditions (paradoseis) not written in the Torah of Moses” (Josephus, Antiquities 13)

103–67: Reigns of Alexander Jannaeus and Alexandra Salome

Composer of the Qumran Pesher Nahum refers to Pharisaic opponents as dorshei halakot (“seekers of smooth things”), a possible punning reference to halakhot derived from proto-rabbinic midrashic hermeneutics.
Brief Timeline of Rabbinic Literature

63 B.C.E.–70 C.E.: Herodian Period

63: Pompey intervenes in a Hasmonean dynastic controversy and Rome incorporates Palestine as a province.

37–34: Herod rules Palestine as Jewish king and begins massive renovation of the Jerusalem Temple.

32 C.E.: Roman procuratorial administration sentences Jesus of Nazareth to execution by crucifixion for political crimes.

ca. 50–70 C.E.: Earliest Gospel traditions refer to Pharisees as guardians of “traditions” (paradoseis).

Early Rabbinic (“Tannaitic”) Period (ca. 70–220)

70–90: Depopulation of Judaea and shift of Jewish settlement to Galilee

ca. 80–130: Postwar Jewish leadership, centered in Yavneh, formulates and gathers traditional teachings ascribed to pre-70 sages “beginning with Hillel and Shammai” (T. Eduyot 1:1).

115–117: Suppression of Diaspora Jews’ uprising against Rome and obliteration of Alexandrian Jewry

132–135: Bar Kokhba rebellion and Hadrianic repression of Galilean Jewry encourages migrations of early rabbinic sages to Parthian Empire.

ca. 140–200: Consolidation of Patriarchate under the Gamalian dynasty

ca. 180–220: Rabbinic traditions trace the origins of the Patriarchate back to the first-century B.C.E. Pharisee Hillel the Elder (e.g., M. Hagigah 2:2, T. Pesahim 4:1-2).

ca. 200–220: Rabbi Yehudah ha-Nasi, administering Jewish affairs from his patriarchal seat in Sepphoris, sponsors the promulgation of the Mishnah, a curriculum of memorized literary traditions designed for the training of rabbinic disciples.

Middle Rabbinic (“Amoraic”) Period (ca. 220–500)

ca. 200–220: Patriarchate of Rabban Shimon b. Rabbi Yehudah ha-Nasi
Brief Timeline of Rabbinic Literature

ca. 220–250: The anonymous introduction to Mishnah Avot (1:1–2:8) provides a transmissional chain linking Torah received at Sinai to the patriarchal line, which now includes Hillel and Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai and culminates in the traditions of Rabban Shimon b. Rabbi Yehudah ha-Nasi, the patriarchal scion of Sepphoris.

c. 220: Rav (Abba Arikha) and Mar Shmuel establish rabbinic presence in Parthian Empire.

226: Shapur I becomes first king of Sasanian Empire in Babylonia.

ca. 220–350: Compilation by anonymous Galilean editors of extra-mishnaic “tannaitic” traditions into mnemonically structured compositions. The Tosefta (“Supplement”) is organized in terms of the structure of the Mishnah, while works of scriptural exegesis [midrash] are organized in tandem with scriptural verses.

ca. 250: Galilean sages in the circle of Rabbi Yohanan b. Nappaha circulate earliest traditions that the Oral Torah received at Sinai is “embedded in the Mishnah” (e.g., Y. Peah 2:6).

313: Roman Emperor Constantine issues Edict of Milan, establishing Christianity as a tolerated religious sect in Roman Empire.

c. 220–425: Galilean amoraic traditions and tannaitic antecedents are gathered for circulation with the Mishnah as a focused curriculum. The Talmud Yerushalmi represents a version of this curriculum as transmitted primarily in Tiberias.

ca. 320–425: Byzantine Palestine becomes a center of Christian pilgrimage as the “Holy Land.”

360–363: Emperor Julian sponsors efforts to rebuild the Jerusalem Temple, but his death interrupts the project.

ca. 300–500: Galilean amoraic traditions are compiled into a series of accompaniments to the books of the Torah (e.g., Genesis Rabbah) and key liturgical scrolls, such as Lamentations (Lamentations Rabbah) and Koheleth (Koheleth Rabbah).

425: Palestinian Patriarch Gamaliel VI dies and no successor is appointed.

c. 220–500: Babylonian sages, centered in such towns as Sura, Pumbeditha, Nehardea, Huzal, and Mehoza, develop, formulate, xvi  Brief Timeline of Rabbinic Literature and amplify traditions of learning (gemara) to accompany memorization and analysis of the Mishnah and other tannaitic materials.

Late Rabbinic (“Savoraic”-“Stammaitic”) Period (ca. 550–620)

553: Emperor Justinian attacks the rabbinic deuterosis (“oral tradition”).

500–600: Compilation of Palestinian midrashic anthologies, such as Pesikta de-Rav Kahana, Pesikta Rabbati, Midrash Tanhuma

ca. 600: Savoraic tradents have organized amoraic traditions from Babylonia and Palestine into coherently plotted critical discourses (sugyot) to accompany mishnaic tractates.

620: Completion of the Babylonian Talmud: A final redactional voice (the “Stam”) enhances the Savoraic gemara with hermeneutical cues and synthesizing discussion that serve as interpretive supplements. The earliest manuscript fragments of the ninth century correspond to extant medieval manuscripts of the Babylonian Talmud.

Early Geonic Period (ca. 620–800)

620: Beginning of Islamic conquests in Mesopotamia and North Africa.

661: Umayyad Dynasty established, with capital in Damascus

750: Abbasid Dynasty establishes Baghdad as its capital

750–800: Geonic heads of Suran and Pumbedithan rabbinical academies relocate to Baghdad. The Babylonian Talmud is the chief curriculum and the source of legal tradition for administering the Jewish ahl al-dhimma on behalf of the Caliph.
Glossary

‘aggadah: nonlegal rabbinic teachings, often appearing in the form of commentary on the narrative portion of biblical text (midrash ‘aggadah).

‘Amora’im: literally, “expounders.” These are rabbinic sages, living from the middle of the third to the early sixth centuries in both Palestine and Babylonia, who appear throughout the Talmud, commenting on the discussions of the Tanna’im found in the Mishnah and the Tosefta.

‘am ha’arez: literally, “people of the land.” In rabbinic usage it tends to convey a perjorative evaluation of the majority of Jews who are uneducated in or resistant to rabbinic customs.

baraita/baraitot: literally, “external.” A baraita is a tannaitic legal ruling, regarded as part of the Oral Torah that was not included in the Mishnah. Baraitot are often cited in the Talmud as evidence for or against amoraic interpretations of the Mishnah.

bet midrash: rabbinic study group or disciple circle, later institutionalized as study house.

Dead Sea Scrolls: a collection of more than 800 fragmentary documents of the Late Second Temple period discovered in several caves near Qumran on the shore of the Dead Sea. The scrolls include biblical texts, commentaries known as pesharim, previously unknown works such as the Temple Scroll and Genesis Apocryphon, and other documents. The first Dead Sea Scrolls were discovered in 1947.

Diaspora: settlements of Jews outside the Land of Israel.

Essenes: a Second Temple pietist and sectarian group, known for being particularly strict in the observance of the commandments. Many scholars believe that the Essenes bore some connection to the Dead Sea sect at Qumran.

Great Assembly: a legendary body of sages listed in the opening paragraph of Mishnah Avot as one link in a chain transmitting the teachings of Torah from the rabbis to Moses.

Ḥakham/Ḥakhamim: rabbinic term for a sage, cognate to the Greek philosophs or didaskalos.
Glossary

halakhah/halakhot: literally, “the procedure (for fulfilling a biblical commandment).” This is the general term for rabbinic law. Halakhah addresses religious and ritual matters as well as civil and criminal law. The seeds of halakhah are found in the Hebrew Bible and developed by the rabbis in the Talmud and other documents. Legal commentary on the Bible is known as midrash halakhah.

Haver/Haverim: rabbinic term for an associate or colleague in the circle of masters and disciples (bet midrash).

masekhet/masekhtot: a tractate or subtopic within one of the orders (sedarim) of the Mishnah or Talmud.

Masoretic Text: the “official” version of the Hebrew Bible. Between the seventh and tenth centuries C.E., a group of scholars known as the Masoretes standardized the text’s spelling, cantillation, vowels, and accents. Direct ancestors of the Masoretic Texts are attested in many biblical manuscripts found among the Dead Sea Scrolls.

midrash/midrashim: the rabbinic mode of biblical commentary, composed in both Palestine and Babylonia by both Tanna’im and ‘Amora’im. Rabbinic midrash comments on either legal or narrative portions of the biblical text (midrash halakhah and midrash aggadah, respectively). Palestinian midrash can be found in various collections (e.g., Genesis Rabbah or Pesikta de-Rav Kahana). Both Palestinian and Babylonian midrash appear in the Talmud.

mikveh: a ritual bath, used for rites of purification from various sorts of uncleanness that would limit a person’s access to the Temple and its sacrificial forms of cleansing. In post-Temple rabbinic Judaism, it is used most commonly at set times during a woman's menstrual cycle.

min/minim: within the Talmud, the term referring to Jews who hold legal or theological views that place them beyond the rabbinic pale. In any given context, references to minim might include believers in the messiahship of Jesus, Sadducees, Boethusians, Zealots, and Samaritans. As depicted in the Talmud, minim are often quite familiar with the scriptural text but dispute rabbinic interpretations.

Mishnah: the earliest collection of tannaitic traditions, organized into six orders and sixty-three tractates. The contents are mostly legal in nature. According to rabbinic tradition, Rabbi Yehudah ha-Nasi (early third century C.E.) is responsible for the compilation of the Mishnah.

mitzvah/mitzvot: literally, “commandment.” The term describes a scriptural law or, in some cases, rituals prescribed by sages (e.g., the lighting of lights on Hanukkah). The rabbis believed the mitzvot were commanded by God to the Jewish people (and, in the case of the seven Noahide commandments, to all humankind).

pesher/pesharim: running commentaries to the books of the Prophets and Psalms, found among the Dead Sea Scrolls and characterized by a distinct eschatological bent. Pesher is a direct antecedent of rabbinic midrash.
Pharisees: a dominant group of Second Temple Jews, from which some early rabbinic sages likely descended.

Sadducees: a group of Second Temple priestly families who appear in rabbinic literature as opponents of halakhic rulings of early sages.

Samaritans: natives of Samaria traditionally opposed to the Judaean Jewish community of the Late Second Temple and early rabbinic periods. Their customs are often disparaged in rabbinic texts as examples of religious error or intentional deviation from rabbinic halakhic norms. Accordingly, rabbinic halakhah defines Samaritans as Jews in some contexts and as non-Jews in others.

Savora’im: a hypothetical group of rabbinic scholars falling chronologically between the ‘Amora’im and the Stamma’im, often believed to have had a crucial role in the editing of talmudic sugyot in the century or so prior to 620 C.E.

seder/sedairim: literally, “order.” The six major legal divisions of the Mishnah, the Tosefta, and the Talmudim.

Shekhinah: a name for God’s presence, usually associated with God’s feminine characteristics.

Shema: Deuteronomy 6:4–9, when recited as part of the liturgy.

Stamma’im: the anonymous sages who, perhaps around 600 C.E., edited the Babylonian Talmud by collecting and reworking earlier traditions. The Stam is the interpretive voice of these anonymous editors.

sugya: the characteristic literary unit of the Talmud exploring some legal or homiletic issue through the voices of disputing or interacting parties. A sugya can be as brief as a few lines of discourse or, in contrast, extend over a folio page or more of the printed Talmud.

talmid hakham/talmidei hakhamim: rabbinic term for a disciple(s).

Talmud: literally meaning “study.” The Talmud is a lengthy commentary on the Mishnah composed in Hebrew and Aramaic. The earlier edition, most likely redacted in Tiberias in the late fourth and/or early fifth centuries C.E., is known as the Jerusalem or Palestinian Talmud (Talmud Yerushalmi). The later and larger edition, redacted in Persia in as-yet poorly understood stages between the late fifth and late eighth centuries C.E., is known as the Babylonian Talmud (Talmud Bavli). Like the Mishnah, the Talmud is organized into orders (sedairim) and within the orders into tractates (masekhot).

Tanna’im: literally, “repeaters” [i.e., of orally transmitted teachings]. According to Talmudic chronology, the period of the Tanna’im begins with the remnants of the Men of the Great Assembly, presumably around the time of Ezra, and continues through the generation of Rabbi Yehudah ha-Nasi. They are responsible for the traditions included in the Mishnah, Tosefta, and other early rabbinic literature.

Torah: the first five books of the Hebrew Bible (the Pentateuch). It is also a generic term for all authoritative religious teaching, for example, “Moses received Torah from Sinai” [M. Avot 1:1].
Torah she-be'al peh: literally, “the oral Torah.” This is the all-inclusive term for traditional rabbinic teaching as it is found in the Mishnah and Talmuds. According to rabbinic tradition, it was taught orally by God to Moses on Sinai and transmitted in an unbroken link of masters and disciples to the talmudic masters.

Torah she-bikhtav: literally “the written Torah.” Broadly, this refers to the canonical Scriptures of the Hebrew Bible, although the paradigmatic work of “Written Torah” is the scroll of the Five Books of Moses.

Tosefta: one of the early tannaitic compilations of rabbinic literature (dating to the third century). Understood by most scholars to be a supplementary commentary on the Mishnah, it is also largely legal. The circumstances and purpose of its compilation are unknown, although it is traditionally ascribed to Rabbi Hyya bar Abba.
