

Contents

Acknowledgments	page ix
1 Introduction: Britten's musical language	1
Utterance as speech event in Our Hunting Fathers	6
Beyond the voice: the song quotations in Lachrymae	14
The social utterance: divine speech and ritual in Noye's Fludde	21
2 Peter Grimes : the force of operatic utterance	32
Naming Grimes: speech as action in the Prologue	36
"The Borough is afraid": choric utterance in Act 1	42
"God have mercy upon me": Peter's self-sentencing	48
The chorus and hate speech	52
"Melancholy and incipient madness": Peter's last scene	62
3 Motive and narrative in Billy Budd	75
Motive as mystery in the Prologue	76
Claggart's Act 1 presence	90
Motive and narrative in Act 2	96
Operatic "point of view": from Claggart's accusation to Billy's trial	106
4 The Turn of the Screw : innocent performance	138
The sound of the turn	141
Innocent ceremony: children's songs and the performance of interiority	155
Ghostly machines: the drama of themes	170
The corrupt imagination: on seeing and hearing ghosts	179
5 Rituals: the War Requiem and Curlew River	187
Liturgy and trope in the War Requiem	191
Liturgy as ritual: theoretic perspectives	197
Utterance and stylistic register in the "Dies irae"	203
Tropes and irony: the "Offertorium"	209
Ritual disintegration	215
Curlew River as ritual	219
Ritual gesture	222
Estrangement and presence	227
"A sign of God's grace": acoustic mystery and the power of prayer	237
6 Subjectivity and perception in Death in Venice	245
"My mind beats on": the conscious self in Scene 1	247
"The traveller's mind": inner and outer experience on the water	252
"The charming Tadzio": Aschenbach's sonic gaze	267

“One moment of reality”: the love vow as focal utterance	274
“Bliss of madness”: the shattered operatic self in Act 2	282
“I go now”: parting utterance	289
Notes	297
Bibliography	337
Index	352