Introduction

What is Teen World?

Teen World is a photocopiable resource book designed to give teenage students the opportunity to communicate with one another in meaningful and enjoyable ways. Each task has been designed especially with teenagers in mind.

Who is Teen World for?

Teen World is for teachers of English whose students are aged 11–18 and who want to introduce their students to topics that will interest and engage them. This is not to say that teachers will not find many of the activities useful with other age groups, but the book has been primarily written for teens. This book can be used to supplement any course book material or to provide self-contained topic-based lessons. The activities are clear and simple to use, with minimal preparation required.

How is Teen World organised?

Teen World is divided into 17 units, each focusing on a different topic of interest to teenagers. Each unit provides one activity for the following levels: elementary, intermediate and upper-intermediate.

The Map of the book and the focus boxes at the start of each activity give information as to which lexical, grammatical and skill areas are covered. This allows easy integration into your syllabus. With each activity, step-by-step instructions are given, as well as an indication of how much preparation and class time the activity should take.

What types of activity are in Teen World?

Teen World includes a wide variety of activity types which will keep your students engaged and on-task as they develop their language skills within the topic areas. Although all skills are covered within the book, the focus is very much on speaking activities and encouraging real communication between students, whether in groups or pairs, and also between the students and the teacher. The activities are motivating and meaningful and give your students a reason for communicating. Activity types include board games, role-plays, quizzes and surveys.

How is each activity organised?

Each activity offers the teacher a warm-up task to lead into the main activity and several suggestions for follow-up activities. The main activity is explained clearly and simply, guiding you through the stages of the lesson. The follow-up activities can often be used as short fillers to round off the class, or, if you have time available to develop them, some can be used to lead into more extensive project work on the topic. However, as with any lesson plan in any teacher's book, do adapt the activities to your students and to best suit your own teaching style and context.

How can I get the most out of Teen World?

Many of the activities in Teen World are excellent starting points for exploring new topics with your class. The teacher's notes offer you ideas in the follow-up tasks on how to extend the activities and some of the tasks lend themselves to developing mini projects. Some follow-up tasks may offer the opportunity of localising the task, bringing it closer to home and thinking about the topic within the backdrop of the students' own town or city, or personalising the activity, which will also give you the opportunity to get to know your students better.

How do the activities develop communicative skills?

As students carry out the activities they revise specific grammar points and lexical sets. They also extend their vocabulary as they explore new topic areas. The new vocabulary they learn during the activities is useful and relevant to what they are doing and therefore will be memorable. As well as expanding students' vocabulary and revising grammar, many of the activities in Teen World have been designed to give students the opportunity to express their opinions and feelings towards an issue within a topic; teenagers often respond very well to the opportunity to express their views and to explore their ideas on issues that interest and affect them.

Recycling new vocabulary

It is always a good idea to recycle new vocabulary regularly, and within Teen World there are plenty of opportunities for students to increase their vocabulary within the topic areas. As well as being introduced to new words, students will need to revise and recycle language regularly. The following are suggestions of how to recycle and revise vocabulary in fun ways:

- Write down all the new words students have learnt in a lesson on cards and keep them in a special 'word bag' or envelope so you can regularly recycle them.
- Put a word card on each student's chair. As they arrive in the class, they have to say a sentence including the word before they can sit down.
- Put students into pairs and give each pair four or five words that they have learnt. Ask students to create a dialogue incorporating at least three of the words.
- Divide the class into teams. Ask one person from each team to sit at the front of the class with their back to the board. Write a word students have learnt on the board. Each team has to describe the word to the person at the front of the class. The first to get the word gets a point. Award extra points for good definitions.

Managing the activities

If some of the activity types in Teen World are new to your students, ensure adequate time is given in explaining and demonstrating the activity before the students begin. As students are doing the activity, be sure to monitor carefully and be available to offer advice and to feed in new language as and when required. Remind students that the process is just as important as the end product (if there is one) and that you are watching throughout the whole task to see who is making a real effort. Effort in speaking English, collaborating with classmates and using initiative should be praised and rewarded throughout each activity.

Classroom dynamics

The activities in Teen World offer the perfect opportunity for you to get to know your students better and for them to get to know one another. Students frequently have the chance to work in pairs and small groups. In most cases I suggest you mix up the groupings regularly so that students work with a variety of different people. However you decide to group your students, this should be taken into consideration at the planning stage. You may decide to put students into friendship groups for some of the activities or you may like to pair up weak and strong students or students of similar levels for certain activities.
