Reviews for the first edition, 1988:

“Lapidus is concerned not with defining an essential Islam, but rather with mapping the role of Islamic beliefs, institutions, and identities in particular historical contexts.”
– International Journal of Middle East Studies

“The value of A History of Islamic Societies lies in its sheer comprehensiveness. In one volume a vast amount of material is synthesized and presented in a clear and effective style. There is nothing else like it. For the first time the worldwide history of Islamic societies is made accessible to the interested reader.”
– The Journal of Asian Studies

“I do not think that any other world civilization can boast a comparable general account of such substance and quality. This is a great deal more than a textbook. It is a product of learning, intellect and style of an extremely high order.”
– Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society
A HISTORY OF ISLAMIC SOCIETIES

In the second edition of this now classic work, Ira Lapidus explores the origins and evolution of Muslim societies, across the world. His overarching vision brings perspective and coherence to a rich and diverse history, which has been updated and revised. The book is divided into three parts. The first covers the formative era of Islamic civilization from the revelation of the Quran to the thirteenth century, and examines the transformation of Islam from a complex of doctrines and cultures into the organizing principles of Middle Eastern societies. The second traces the creation of similar societies in the Balkans, North Africa, Central Asia, China, India, Southeast Asia and sub-Saharan Africa. The third part explores the reaction of these societies to European imperialism, and describes how they emerged at the beginning of the twentieth century as independent states with fledgling economies. The concluding chapters consider Islam’s most recent history, the formation of Islamic revival movements in their religious, community-building and political dimensions, and global Islamic identities and organizations.

Throughout, the author engages with the social structures of these societies, their families and communities, religious congregations and political regimes. The richness of Islamic civilization is illustrated through its language, theology, philosophy and law, through its art and architecture.

Since it was first published this book has become essential reading for students and for all those seeking to understand the Muslim peoples, their history and their civilization. In these troubled times, this book is an education and an illumination.

IRA M. LAPIDUS is Professor Emeritus of History, University of California at Berkeley. He is one of the most distinguished and highly regarded scholars writing Islamic history today. His many articles and books include Islam, Politics and Social Movements (edited with Edmund Burke, 1988) and Contemporary Islamic Movements in Historical Perspective (1984). The first edition of A History of Islamic Societies was published in 1988 as a supplement to The Cambridge History of Islam (1970). Since publication, the book has become a classic work of history. The second edition brings this definitive and best-selling book to a new generation of readers.
CONTENTS

List of illustrations xiii
List of maps xv
List of tables and figures xvii
Preface and acknowledgments to the first edition xviii
Preface and acknowledgments to the second edition xxvii
Publisher’s preface xxx

PART I THE ORIGINS OF ISLAMIC CIVILIZATION:
THE MIDDLE EAST FROM C. 600 TO C. 1200

Introduction: Middle Eastern societies before the advent of Islam 3
   Ancient empires 4
   Religion and society before Islam 6

THE PREACHING OF ISLAM

1 Arabia 10
   Clans and kingdoms 12
   Poetry and the gods 15

2 The life of the Prophet 18
   Muhammad in Mecca 20
   The Medina years 23
   Triumph and the return to Mecca 27
   The old world and the new religion 28

THE ARAB-MUSLIM IMPERIUM (632–945)

3 The Arab conquests and the socio-economic bases of empire 31
   The Arab conquests 31
   The administration of the new empire 34
Contents

Economic change and the new urban societies 38
Clients, converts, and communities 40

4 The Caliphate 45
From nomadic kingdom to Syrian monarchy 45
The ‘Abbasid empire: social revolution and political reaction 56

5 Cosmopolitan Islam: the Islam of the imperial elite 67
Art, architecture, and the concept of the Caliphate 68
The Arabic humanities 74
Persian literature 76
Hellenism 77

6 Urban Islam: the Islam of the religious elites 81
Sunni scripturalism 82
Theology 87
Mystics and Sufism 90
Shi’i Islam 94

7 Islamic culture and the separation of state and religion 99

8 The fall of the ‘Abbasid empire 103
The decline of the central government 105
Provincial autonomy and disintegration 106

FROM ISLAMIC CULTURE TO ISLAMIC SOCIETY:
IRAN AND IRAQ, 945–c. 1200

9 The post-Abbasid Middle Eastern state system 112
Iraq, Iran, and the eastern provinces 112
The Saljuq empire 117
The slave states and administration 120
The iqta’ system and Middle Eastern feudalism 122
Local courts and regional cultures: Islam in Persian garb 125

10 Muslim communities and Middle Eastern societies 133
The Shi’i communities 133
The schools of law and Sunni sectarianism 134
Sufi brotherhoods 137
Muslim religious movements and the state 141
Islamic institutions and a mass Islamic society 142

11 The collective ideal 147
The juristic theory 147
Mirrors for princes 149
The philosopher-king 152

12 The Personal Ethic 156
Normative Islam: scripture, Sufism, and theology 156
Sufism in the post-‘Abbasid era 158
Al-Ghazzali: his life 160
Al-Ghazzali: his vision 162
Rationality and theology 166
Contents

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Alternative Islam: philosophy, gnostic and popular Sufism</td>
<td>169</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The dialogues within Islam</td>
<td>177</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conclusion: The Middle Eastern Islamic paradigm</td>
<td>183</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The formation of imperial Islamic society</td>
<td>184</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>States and communities in a fragmented Middle East</td>
<td>187</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Coping with the limits of worldly life</td>
<td>189</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>State and religion in the Islamic paradigm</td>
<td>192</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Part II THE WORLDWIDE DIFFUSION OF ISLAMIC SOCIETIES

FROM THE TENTH TO THE NINETEENTH CENTURIES

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Introduction: the Islamic world and the rise of Europe</td>
<td>197</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conversion to Islam</td>
<td>197</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muslim elites and Islamic communities</td>
<td>206</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The social structure of Islam</td>
<td>211</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muslim states</td>
<td>215</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Confrontation with Europe</td>
<td>218</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

THE MIDDLE EASTERN ISLAMIC SOCIETIES

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>13 Iran: the Mongol, Timurid, and Safavid empires</td>
<td>226</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Mongols</td>
<td>226</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Timurids</td>
<td>229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Iranian society and Sufi movements</td>
<td>231</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Safavid Iran</td>
<td>234</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The conversion of Iran to Shi'ism</td>
<td>241</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The dissolution of the Safavid empire</td>
<td>244</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>14 The Turkish migrations and the Ottoman empire</td>
<td>248</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The migrations and Turkish-Islamic states in Anatolia (1071–1243)</td>
<td>248</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The rise of the Ottomans (c. 1280–1453)</td>
<td>250</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Ottoman world empire</td>
<td>253</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Ottoman state</td>
<td>258</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rulers and subjects</td>
<td>263</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Ottoman economy</td>
<td>268</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Provincial administration</td>
<td>273</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Ottoman empire in disarray</td>
<td>275</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>15 The Arab Middle East</td>
<td>283</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Egypt and Syria in the “Caliphal” age</td>
<td>283</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Saljuq model: state and religion</td>
<td>290</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Ottoman era</td>
<td>294</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>16 Islamic North Africa and Spain to the nineteenth century</td>
<td>299</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>State formation in the “Caliphal” phase</td>
<td>299</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Spanish-Islamic civilization</td>
<td>309</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The tripartite regime: Tunisia, Algeria, and Morocco from the thirteenth to the nineteenth centuries</td>
<td>319</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>States and Islam: North African variations</td>
<td>333</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Contents

ISLAM IN CENTRAL AND SOUTHERN ASIA

17 Inner Asia from the Mongol conquests to the nineteenth century 337
   The western and northern steppes 338
   Turkestan (Transoxania, Khwarizm, and Farghana) 345
   Eastern Turkestan and China 351
18 The Indian subcontinent: the Delhi Sultanates and the Mughal empire 356
   The Muslim conquests and the Delhi Sultanates 356
   Conversion and the Muslim communities 361
   The varieties of Indian Islam 364
   Muslim holy men and political authority 367
   The Mughal empire 368
   The decline of the Mughal empire 378
19 The formation of Islamic societies in Southeast Asia 382
   The diffusion of Islam 382
   The Portuguese, the Dutch, and the Muslim states 384
   Islamic societies in Southeast Asia 387
   The new imperialism 397

ISLAM IN AFRICA

20 Islam in Sudanic, savannah, and forest West Africa 400
   The kingdoms of western and central Sudan 400
   Merchants and missionaries in the desert, forest, and coastal regions 409
   The West African jihads 416
21 Islam in East Africa and the rise of European colonial empires 429
   Sudan 429
   The coastal cities and Swahili Islam 432
   Ethiopia and Somalia 435
   Colonialism and the defeat of Muslim expansion 438
Conclusion: the varieties of Islamic society 443

PART III THE MODERN TRANSFORMATION:
MUSLIM PEOPLES IN THE NINETEENTH AND TWENTIETH CENTURIES

Introduction: modernity and the transformation of Muslim societies 455
   Islamic modernism 457
   Islamic reformism 461

NATIONALISM AND ISLAM IN THE MIDDLE EAST

22 Iran: state and religion in the modern era 469
   Qajar Iran: the long nineteenth century 469
   The constitutional crisis 473
   Twentieth-century Iran: the Pahlavi era 476
   The ‘ulama’ and the revolution 482
   The Islamic Republic 485
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chapter</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>23</td>
<td>The dissolution of the Ottoman empire and the modernization of Turkey</td>
<td>489</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The partition of the Ottoman empire</td>
<td>489</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Ottoman reform</td>
<td>493</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Republican Turkey</td>
<td>501</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>Egypt: secularism and Islamic modernity</td>
<td>512</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The nineteenth-century reforming state</td>
<td>512</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>British colonial rule</td>
<td>515</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Egyptian awakening: from Islamic modernism to nationalism</td>
<td>516</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The liberal republic</td>
<td>519</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Nasser era</td>
<td>523</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Sadat and Mubarak</td>
<td>526</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25</td>
<td>The Arab Middle East: Arabism, military states, and Islam</td>
<td>535</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Notables and the rise of Arab nationalism</td>
<td>535</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Arabism in the colonial period</td>
<td>540</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The struggle for Arab unity and the contemporary fertile crescent states</td>
<td>546</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Palestinian movement and the struggle for Palestine</td>
<td>557</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Arabian peninsula</td>
<td>566</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Arab states, nationalism, and Islam</td>
<td>580</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>North Africa in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries</td>
<td>586</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Algeria</td>
<td>586</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Tunisia</td>
<td>601</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Morocco</td>
<td>606</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Libya</td>
<td>612</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Islam in state ideologies and opposition movements</td>
<td>615</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27</td>
<td>The Indian subcontinent: India, Pakistan, and Bangladesh</td>
<td>620</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Muslim militancy from Plassey to 1857</td>
<td>622</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>From the Mutiny to World War I</td>
<td>623</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>From cultural to political action</td>
<td>629</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>From elite to mass politics</td>
<td>632</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Pakistan movement</td>
<td>635</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Muslims of India, Pakistan, and Bangladesh</td>
<td>640</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Conclusion</td>
<td>650</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>28</td>
<td>Islam in Indonesia, Malaysia, and the Philippines</td>
<td>652</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Dutch rule and the capitalist system in the Indies</td>
<td>652</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Indonesian traditionalism, nationalism, and Islamic reform</td>
<td>658</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Compromise and competition: 1900–1955</td>
<td>666</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Indonesia from 1955 to the present</td>
<td>670</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>British Malaya and independent Malaysia</td>
<td>675</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Philippines</td>
<td>681</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Conclusion</td>
<td>683</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>29</td>
<td>Inner Asia under Russian and Chinese rule; the Caucasus and Afghanistan</td>
<td>684</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Tsarist rule and Jadid</td>
<td>684</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The revolutionary era</td>
<td>693</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Soviet modernization</td>
<td>700</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Contents

Newly independent states in formerly Soviet Inner Asia 709
The Caucasus 714
Afghanistan 718
The Muslims of China 725
Conclusion 731

ISLAM IN TWENTIETH-CENTURY AFRICA

30 Islam in West Africa 732
Colonialism and independence: African states and Islam 732
Mauritania 738
Senegal 741
Nigeria 745
The Wahhabis and reformist movements 754

31 Islam in East Africa 761
Sudan 761
Somalia 768
Ethiopia and Eritrea 770
Swahili East Africa 772
Universal Islam and African diversity 780

ISLAM IN THE WEST

32 Muslims in Europe and America 785
Eastern Europe 785
Western Europe 789
Immigrant identities in Europe: a broad spectrum of responses 805
Muslims in America 805

Conclusion: secularized Islam and Islamic revival 814
The institutional and cultural features of pre-modern Islamic societies 815
The nineteenth- and twentieth-century transformation of Muslim societies 817
The Islamic revival 822
Contemporary patterns in the relations between states and Islamic societies 835
The neo-Islamic states 844
Muslims as political minorities 850
The role of women in Muslim societies 851
Concluding remarks 867

Glossary 875
Bibliography 884
Index 941
Illustrations

1. The Pilgrimage to the Ka'ba (Newspix.com.au)
2. The Dome of the Rock
3. The central portico of the Umayyad Mosque of Damascus (Courtesy of Gordon Holler)
4. Mosaics of the Damascus mosque (detail) (Courtesy of Sheila S. Blair and Jonathan M. Bloom)
5. A page of an illuminated Quran (Reproduced by kind permission of the Trustees of the Chester Beatty Library, Dublin)
6. An old woman petitions Sultan Sanjar (The Metropolitan Museum of Art, Gift of Alexander Smith Cochran, 1913. 13.228.7 fol.17)
7. A youth prostrating himself before a ruler (Los Angeles County Museum of Art, the Edward Binney, 3rd, Collection of Turkish Art. Photograph © 2002 Museum Associates LACMA)
8. A Sufi preaching (The Bodleian Library, University of Oxford)
9. The battle of the twelve heroes (Los Angeles County Museum of Art, the Nasli M. Heeramanneck Collection, Gift of Joan Palevsky, by Exchange Photograph © 2002 Museum Associates LACMA)
10. The Maydan of Isfahan (© Roger Wood/CORBIS)
11. Persian court dress in the Safavid period: (a) male
   Persian court dress in the Safavid Period: (b) female (Cornelius de Bruyn: Travels in Muscovy, Persia and Part of the East Indies, 1737)
12. Sultan Selim the First (Sonia Halliday Photographs)
13. The Sultan Ahmed (Blue) Mosque, Istanbul (Photodisc/Getty Images)
14. Sultan Ahmed (Blue) Mosque, Istanbul; (interior) (Photodisc/Getty Images)
15. Patio de los Leones, Alhambra (Granada, Spain) (Ray Líñchez Collection, Architecture Visual Resources Library, University of California at Berkeley)
16. The Registan of Samarkand (Courtesy of Sheila S. Blair and Jonathan M. Bloom)
17. The marriage of Akbar (Victoria and Albert Museum)
Illustrations

18 The Taj Mahal (Courtesy of Thomas Metcalf) 376
19 The Ubaddiah mosque, Kuala Kangson, Malaysia (The Photo Source) 389
21 The Muharram Procession, Calcutta (© Earl and Nazima Kowall/CORBIS) 452
22 A girls’ school, Tehran (© David and Peter Turnley/CORBIS) 486
23 Mustafa Kemal Ataturk and the Shah of Iran (Australian Picture Library/CORBIS) 504
24 President Nasser’s car is mobbed by townspeople (Popperphoto) 525
25 HAMAS posters for student council elections; al-Azhar University, Gaza (Courtesy of Jeroen Gunning) 564
26 Families celebrate the end of Ramadan at the Jami’ Masjid of Delhi (Courtesy of Thomas Metcalf) 642
27 Pakistani soldiers (Hagar Shour/Camera Press) 647
28 Dawn prayer to celebrate the end of Ramadan, Jogyakarta, Indonesia (Hutchinson Library) 655
29 ‘Ulama’ study the Quran in Tashkent (Novosti Photo Library) 707
30 The Mosque of Mazar-i Sharif, Afghanistan 721
31 A Mosque in Inner Mongolia (© Nik Wheeler/CORBIS) 728
32 The Friday Mosque at Mopti, Mali (Marli Shamir) 757
33 The tomb of the Mahdi, Omdurman, Sudan (Hutchinson Library) 764
34 An anti-Rushdie demonstration, London (© Richard Wood/CORBIS ) 800

Every effort has been made to trace and acknowledge copyright. The author and publisher would be pleased to hear from copyright owners they have been unable to trace.
Maps

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Map Number</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>29</td>
<td>Islamic reform and resistance movements: eighteenth and nineteenth centuries</td>
<td>465</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>30</td>
<td>Territorial losses and the partition of the Ottoman empire: 1683–1923</td>
<td>491</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>31</td>
<td>The Middle East between the world wars</td>
<td>542</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>32</td>
<td>Arab–Israeli conflict: (a) UN Partition Plan, 1947; (b) Israel and the occupied territories, 1967</td>
<td>561</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>33</td>
<td>Arabia and the Persian Gulf: c. 1974</td>
<td>577</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>34</td>
<td>India, Pakistan, and Bangladesh</td>
<td>641</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>35</td>
<td>Soviet and Chinese Inner Asia to 1990</td>
<td>699</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>36</td>
<td>Oil fields and pipelines: the Middle East and Inner Asia</td>
<td>711</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>37</td>
<td>Ethnic populations in Inner Asia and Afghanistan</td>
<td>719</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>38</td>
<td>Northern and Sudanic Africa: c. 1980</td>
<td>739</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>39</td>
<td>Muslim population by percentage of total population</td>
<td>831</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
TABLES AND FIGURES

TABLES

1 Islam in world history 9
2 Outline chronology of early Islamic history 46
3 Early schools of law 85
4 Middle Eastern provincial regimes: ‘Abbasid empire and post-imperial era 109
5 Central concepts in law 157
6 The vocabulary of Sufism 167
7 Muslim religious movements and sects 178
8 Muslim worship 181
9 The social organization of Sufism 210
10 Muslim religious officials 215
11 Iran: outline chronology 230
12 The Ottoman dynasty 251
13 North Africa: outline chronology 300
14 Inner Asia: outline chronology 340
15 Muslim India: outline chronology 357
16 Muslim reform (tajdid) movements, eighteenth to twentieth centuries 464
17 Regimes of the Arabian peninsula 568
18 Muslim population by countries 832
19 Muslim population by region 836

FIGURES

1 The family of the Prophet 19
2 The Banu Umayya and the Umayyad Caliphs 48
3 The ‘Abbasid Caliphs to the disintegration of the empire 55
4 The Shi‘i imams 96
5 Saljuq-period dynasties 119
6 The early tariqat and their founders 139
7 The Isma‘ili imams 284
8 The Qadiriya and the Tijaniya in West Africa 415
Islam is the religion of peoples who inhabit the middle regions of the planet from the Atlantic shores of Africa to the South Pacific, from the steppes of Siberia to the remote islands of South Asia: Berbers, West Africans, Sudanese, Swahili-speaking East Africans, Middle Eastern Arabs, Turks, Iranians, Turkish and Persian peoples of Central Asia, Afghans, Pakistanis, many millions of Indians and Chinese, most of the peoples of Malaysia and Indonesia, and minorities in the Philippines – some one-and-a-quarter billion people adhere to Islam. In ethnic background, language, customs, social and political organization, and forms of culture and technology, they represent innumerable variations of human experience. Yet Islam unites them. Though Islam is not often the totality of their lives, it permeates their self-conception, regulates their daily existence, provides the bonds of society, and fulfills the yearning for salvation. For all its variousness, Islam forges one of the great spiritual families of mankind.

This book is the history of how these multitudes have become Muslims and what Islam means to them. In this book we ask: What is Islam? What are its values? How did so many peoples, so different and dispersed, become Muslims? What does Islam contribute to their character, to their way of living, to the ordering of their communities, and to their aspirations and identity? What are the historical conditions that have given rise to Islamic religious and cultural values; what are the manifold ways in which it is understood and practiced? To answer these questions we shall see how religious concepts about the nature of reality and the meaning of human experience, embedded at once in holy scripture and works of commentary, and as thoughts and feelings in the minds and hearts of Muslim believers, have given shape to the lifestyles and institutions of Muslim peoples, and how reciprocally the political and social experiences of Muslim peoples have been given expression in the values and symbols of Islam. Our history of Islam is the history of a dialogue between religious symbols and everyday reality.

This history will be presented in two dimensions: one historical and evolutionary, an effort to account for the formation of Islamic societies and their change over time; the other analytic and comparative, which attempts to understand the variations among them. Three methodological and historical assumptions underlie this approach. The first is that the history of whole societies may be presented in terms of their institutional systems. An institution, whether an empire, a mode of economic exchange, a family, or a religious practice, is a human activity carried out in a patterned relationship with other human beings as defined and legitimized in the mental world of the participants. An institution encompasses at once an activity, a pattern of social relations, and a set of mental constructs.

The second assumption is that the history of Islamic societies may be told in terms of four basic types of institutions: familial, including tribal, ethnic, and other small-scale community groups; economic, the organization of production and distribution of material goods; cultural or religious concepts of ultimate values and human goals and the collectivities built upon such commitments; and political, the organization of conflict resolution, defense, and domination.

The third assumption is that the institutional patterns characteristic of Islamic societies had their origin in ancient Mesopotamia in the third millennium BC. The constellation of lineage and tribal, religious, and political structures created by the Mesopotamian city-states and empires set the foundations for the later evolution of Middle Eastern societies before and during the Islamic era, and was either reproduced or diffused from the Middle East to other Islamic societies. Thus the Middle Eastern Islamic society was based upon the infusion of more ancient institutions with an Islamic cultural style and identity. These Middle Eastern Islamic institutions in turn interacted with the institutions and cultures of other world regions to create a number of variant Islamic societies. In the modern era these variant societies were again transformed, this time by interaction with Europe. Modern Islamic countries are each the product of the interaction of a particular regional form of Islamic society with different forms of European imperial, economic, and cultural influences. The variation among modern Islamic societies may be traced to older patterns.

Part I examines the formative era of Islamic civilization from the revelation of the Quran to the thirteenth century. It begins with the Prophet Muhammad, and continues with the classical Islamic era which gave rise to Arabic literature, Islamic religious teaching, and cosmopolitan artistic achievements – a tripartite complex of tribal–ethnic, religious, and courtly–aristocratic cultures from which all later versions of Islamic civilization derive. It attempts to explain the development of this civilization in terms of the relationship of Islamic cultures to past patterns of Middle Eastern societies, and in terms of the cultural effects of the formation of new empires, urbanization, and social change. It concludes with the history of Iraq and Iran from the tenth to the thirteenth centuries, to explain the transformation of Islam from a complex of doctrines and cultural systems into the operative principles of a Middle Eastern society. In this period, Muslim peoples formed new state and communal institutions (Shi'i “sects,” Sunni schools of law, and Sufi brotherhoods), and defined the relations of political regimes to religious bodies. This was the age in which Islam became the religion of the masses of Middle Eastern peoples.

In its turn the Islamic version of Middle Eastern society became a paradigm for the creation of similar societies in other parts of the world. Part II traces the diffusion of the Middle Eastern Islamic paradigm. From the seventh to the nineteenth centuries, Islam became the religion of peoples in the Arab Middle East, Inner Asia and China, India, Southeast Asia, Africa, and the Balkans. It considers the forces behind the diffusion of Islam, and the interaction between Islamic religious values and existing cultures and societies. It also examines the consolidation of Islamic regimes including the Mughal, Ottoman, and Safavid empires, and Islamic states in Southeast Asia, Africa, and elsewhere, and their varied ways of integrating political regimes, Islamic religious institutions, and non-Islamic values and forms of community.

By the eighteenth century the Middle Eastern paradigm for an Islamic society had been replicated, multiplied, and modified into a worldwide family of societies. Each was a recognizable variant upon an underlying structure of familial–communal, religious, and state institutions. Each also represented a version of the various ways in which Islamic belief, culture, and social institutions have interacted with the still broader complex of human organization – including the non-Islamic institutions of political regimes, systems of economic production and exchange, non-Islamic forms of kinship, tribal, and ethnic communities, and pre-Islamic or non-Islamic modes of culture. Here we explore the degree to which the Middle Eastern paradigm was transferred to new Islamic societies. What was the relation of Islamic to pre-Islamic institutions in these regions? What were the similarities and differences among these numerous Islamic societies?

The transformation of Islamic societies from the eighteenth century to the present tests the resilience of the historical templates and the identity of the Islamic world system. In part III we see how Islamic societies were profoundly disrupted by the breakup of Muslim empires, economic decline, internal religious conflict, and by the establishment of European economic, political, and cultural domination. These forces led to the creation of national states, to the modernization of agriculture, to industrialization, to major changes in class structure, and to the acceptance of secular nationalist and other modern ideologies. In the course of these changes Islamic thought and Islamic communal institutions have been radically altered. The legacy of eighteenth- and nineteenth-century historical change, however, is not a unilinear movement toward “modernization,” but a heritage of continuing conflict in Muslim countries over political, economic, and cultural goals. Political decline and European intervention have led to a struggle among political elites, scholarly (‘ulama’) and mystical (Sufi) religious leaders, and revivalist movements for political and social power. While secularized political elites tend to favor modernization in Western forms, and the redefinition of Islam to make it consistent with modern forms of state and economy, religious reformers espouse the revitalization of moral values and the formation of new political communities on Islamic principles. By examining the historical forms of political and religious organization, the impact of European imperialisms, and the political and ideological struggles of competing elites in Muslim countries, this book will attempt to interpret the development of present-day societies.

Has the impact of the West and of modern technical civilization generated a new form of society or do the historical political and religious templates still regulate the destiny of new Muslim nations? Do present conditions reflect the cultural and political qualities of the imperial, sectarian, and tribal societies of the eighteenth century or have the nineteenth- and twentieth-century transformations of economy, class structure, and values generated a new evolutionary stage in the history of Islamic societies?

This is not, it should be clear, an effort to define an essential Islam, but rather an attempt to develop a comparative method of assessing the role of Islamic beliefs, institutions, and identities in particular historical contexts. The mechanism I have adopted to do this – the expository framework – is based on the assumptions that Islamic societies are built upon institutions and that these institutions are subject to internal variation, to variations in the relationships among them, and to variations over time. The limited number of institutional factors imposes a constraint that allows us to conceive this large subject in some ordered way, but also allows for the depiction of individual societies as concrete and different entities. By exploring the variation of institutions in differing contexts, we may be able to comprehend why Islamic societies are similar in general form and yet differ so much in specific qualities.

In this volume primary emphasis will be placed upon the communal, religious, and political institutions of Islamic societies rather than upon technologies and economies. I subordinate economic to non-economic institutions because the distinctive historical developments in Islamic societies in the last millennium have been cultural and political; and because differences of culture and institutions differentiate Islamic societies from each other and from other human civilizations. In Muslim societies the basic forms of economic production and exchange were set down in the pre-Islamic era. The forms of agricultural and pastoral production, handicrafts, manufacturing, prevailing systems of exchange, and technological capacities are all older than, and continue through, the Islamic era in their inherited forms. This is not to deny that there has been considerable variation in economic activity in and among Muslim societies, such as in the relative role of pastoral, agricultural, commercial, and manufacturing activities, or in degrees of poverty and prosperity, or in the distribution of wealth; or that these differences have important cultural and political implications, or that economic considerations are an essential aspect of all human values and social action. Still, the fundamental modes of economic production and exchange were basically unaltered until the modern era, and economic and technological changes were not the primary sources of political and cultural variation or of changes in class structure and social organization. Until the modern era economic activity remained embedded in communal and political structures, and class divisions in society did not determine, but were inherent in, state and religious organizations. Even in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, when European capitalism and profound economic and technological changes have influenced Islamic societies, economically derived classes such as merchants and proletariats were weakly developed in Muslim countries, and political and religious elites, institutions, and cultural values played a predominant role in the development of these societies. While cultural and sociopolitical institutions and economic and technological forces can each be an autonomous causal factor in historical change, in the history of Islamic societies the former have been the significant locus of historical individuation. Whether twentieth-century technological and economic change now call into question the existence of an Islamic group of societies is a moot point.

These assumptions derive from a variety of historical, social scientific, and philosophic sources. As a historian, however, my primary interest is not in theory but in the adaptation of the theory to the needs of a coherent and meaningful exposition. The central problem of this book is how to present a history of enormous diversity—the history of societies that to sight and sound are utterly different—and yet preserve some sense of their historical and institutional relatedness. For the reader this book is intended to provide a coherent overview of Islamic history. As a teacher I think that the endless everyday flow of events and news confuses rather than enlightens us, and that a large “map” of the subject as a whole is essential to the understanding of particular occurrences. Only from an overall point of view can we acquire the poise, distance, and perspective that make it possible to identify basic structural factors and long-term historical trends, and distinguish them from accidental and short-term considerations.

A few comments about the organization of the book may help readers find their way through this large volume. First, the reader should be cautioned that the factual narrative approach of this book conceals great uncertainties of historical judgment, incomplete knowledge, conflicts of opinion and interpretation among experts, and constantly changing research which brings new knowledge and new points of view to the fore. Little has been said about the degree of reliability or the margin of error in the presentation of information, but the book is based upon the most reliable research and interpretation, though the reader should be aware that parts of the work are provisional and exploratory in nature, and represent the author’s best judgment about particular subjects.

The book is divided into three parts, each of which has an introduction and conclusion which deal with the organizing concepts upon which the book is based and summarize the important themes that come up in the narrative chapters. For an overview of the evolution of Islamic societies, these introductory and concluding chapters may be read separately or in conjunction with selected period or regional histories.

Each of the three main divisions deals with a particular epoch in Islamic history—the origins, diffusion, and modern transformation of Islamic societies. This means that Islamic culture, arts, literatures, and religious values are discussed primarily in part I, and are only referred to in a summary way in parts II and III. Regional histories also are ordinarily divided into two or three sections. The history of Middle Eastern Islamic societies is divided among all three parts; the histories of other Islamic societies feature in parts II and III. There are, however, a number of exceptions. While part I deals generally with the formation of Middle Eastern Islamic societies from the seventh to the thirteenth centuries, for narrative convenience the early histories of the Arab Middle East, North Africa, and Spain are grouped with their regional histories in part II; portions of these chapters may usefully be read in conjunction with part I. Similarly, the entire history of the Arabian peninsula, Libya, the Caucasus, Afghanistan, and the Philippines is found in part III rather than being scattered through the volume. The history of all these societies concludes around 2000.

The definition of geographic regions also requires some arbitrary simplifications. Muslim world areas are by and large defined in regional terms such as Middle East, North Africa, Indian subcontinent, Southeast Asia, West and East Africa, and so on. For convenience of reference, and despite the obvious anachronism, these areas or parts of them are commonly identified by the names of present national states such as India, Indonesia, or Nigeria. This is to simplify identification for readers unfamiliar with the geography of these vast regions and to avoid such cumbersome locutions as “areas now part of the state of —,” but it should be clear that the use of these terms does not necessarily imply any similarity of state and social organization or of cultural style between pre-modern and contemporary times. It should also be noted that I have placed the history of Libya in the chapter on North Africa and the Sudan in East Africa though these countries also belong to the Arab Middle East. Finally, not all Muslim regions are covered in this book. Some Muslim minorities, as in mainland Southeast Asia and Ceylon, are not discussed.

Transliterations from the numerous native languages of Muslim peoples have been simplified for the convenience of English readers. In general I have tried to follow standard scholarly usage for each world area, modified by the elimination of diacritical marks and sometimes adapted to give a fair sense of pronunciation. Certain standard Arabic terms and names are given in their original, usually Arabic, literary form despite actual variations in spelling and pronunciation the world over. Dates are given in the Christian era.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

In the preparation of the book I have been greatly aided by my students, research assistants, and colleagues. They have helped me, depending upon their skills and my background in a given world area, in the following ways: by the preparation of bibliographies; reading, review, and preparation of digests on relevant literatures; research into particular themes and topics in both secondary and source materials; summaries or translations of materials in languages I do not read, and discussion of historiographical or methodological problems in their particular fields or disciplines. They have made an important contribution to my understanding of the role of Islam in several world areas, and have enormously facilitated the completion of the book.

I would like to thank David Goodwin, Margaret Malamud, Ann Taboroff, Sahar von Schlegell (Islamic history and Sufism); James Reid (Iran); Corrine Blake (Arab Middle East); Elaine Combs-Schilling (North Africa); Sandria Freitag and David Gilmartin (India); Mary Judd and Allan Samson (Indonesia); William McFarren and Leslie Sharp (Africa); Rose Glickman and Mark Saroyan (Russian Inner Asia); and John Foran and Michael Hughes (modernization and political economy). I am also grateful for the bibliographical help of Melissa MacCauly and Susan Mattern.

For the selection of illustrations, I benefited from the advice and assistance of Guitty Azarpay, Jere Bacharach, Sheila Blair, Jonathan Bloom, Herbert Bodman, Gordon Holler, Thomas Lentz, Kim Lyon, Amy Newhall, and Labelle Prussin. I warmly thank the individuals and institutions by whose kind permission they are reproduced here. I am grateful to Cherie A. Semans of the Department of Geography, University of California, Berkeley, for the preparation of the designs and sketch maps upon which the maps in this volume are based.

Many friends and colleagues have read portions or even the whole of the manuscript and have given me invaluable corrections, suggestions, and reflective thoughts. Each of them has enriched this volume, though none of them is responsible for the remaining faults. It gives me great pleasure to thank Jere Bacharach, Thomas Bisson, William Brinner, Edmund Burke III, Elaine Combs-Schilling, Shmuel Eisenstadt, Sandria Freitag, David Gilmartin, Albert Hourani, Suad Joseph, Barbara Metcalf, Thomas Metcalf, Martha Olcott, James Reid, Richard Roberts, William Roff, Allan Samson, Stanford Shaw, David Skinner, Ilkay Sunar, Ilter Turan, Abraham Udovitch, Lucette Valensi, and Reginald Zelnik. As much as the writing, the friendship and generosity of these people have blessed many years of work.

Several colleagues have had a particularly strong effect on the development of my understanding and have generously shared with me their views and unpublished work on various aspects of this book. In particular I would like to thank Barbara Metcalf (India), Elaine Combs-Schilling (North Africa), Suad Joseph (women’s studies), Martha Olcott (Soviet Inner Asia), James Reid (Iran and Inner Asia), Allan Samson (Indonesia), Warren Fusfeld (for his dissertation on the Naqshbandiya in India), and Sandria Freitag and David Gilmartin (India). Morris Rossabi has graciously allowed me to see a copy of an unpublished article by Joseph Fletcher on the Naqshbandiya in China.

I am equally indebted to the many people who have helped prepare the manuscript and the published book. The staff of the Center for Advanced Studies in the Behavioral Sciences, Stanford, California prepared an early draft of the manuscript. Muriel Bell edited several of the chapters. Lynn Gale helped to arrange the transmission of this material to the word processor of the Institute of International Studies at Berkeley, where Nadine Zelinski and Christine Peterson worked with great skill on the preparation of the manuscript and have given me endless friendly support; they are among the close collaborators to whom I owe this book. The staff of Cambridge University Press, Elizabeth Wetton, editor, Susan Moore, subeditor, and Jane Williams, designer, have been especially helpful. Finally, but not least, I am grateful to my wife, Brenda Webster, for her amazed, and amazing, patience as this book grew larger and larger, for her suggestions and criticism, and above all, for her faith in the work.

The research for this project has been generously supported by the Institute of International Studies of the University of California, Berkeley. I would like to express my thanks to Professor Carl Rosberg, Director of the Institute, to Mrs Karin Beros, Management Services Officer of the Institute, and to the Institute staff, who have been generous and gracious in their support. The preparation of this volume has also been made possible by a year in residence at the Center for Advanced Studies in the Behavioral Sciences, Stanford, California, with the support of the National Endowment for the Humanities, and by a research grant from the Hoover Institution, Stanford University. The completion of this work has been made possible by a grant from the Division of Research of the National Endowment for the Humanities, an independent federal agency. To these institutions I express my deep appreciation for affording me the opportunity to concentrate upon research and writing.

With the permission of the publishers extensive passages have been quoted or adapted from my previous publications:

“Knowledge, Virtue and Action: The Classical Muslim Conception of Adab and the Nature of Religious Fulfillment in Islam,” Moral Conduct and Authority in South

Contemporary Islamic Movements in Historical Perspective, Policy Papers No. 18, Institute of International Studies, University of California, Berkeley, 83.

IRA M. LAPIDUS
University of California, Berkeley
1985
PREFACE AND ACKNOWLEDGMENTS TO THE SECOND EDITION

This book was first published in 1988 on the basis of research that extended to about 1980. At that time the contemporary Islamic revival was in an early stage. There had been an Islamic revolution in Iran, but whether it would spread to other, and Sunni, Muslim countries was much debated. After a long phase of secularization in politics and law, and the beginnings of an economic development process not connected to Islam, the revival reaffirmed the importance of Islam in the contemporary construction of Muslim societies. The beginnings of the Islamic revival made it possible to see that Muslim societies worldwide shared a common heritage and elements of a common identity. The evidence of their relatedness, however tenuous at the time, enabled us to look for the evolutionary origin of that common identity and to see the processes of the formation of Islamic societies as a historical whole. Thus in the first edition we were able to see the origins of Islamic civilizations in the ancient Near East and in the teachings of the Prophet Muhammad, and see the successive phases of historical development. In the first phase an Islamic culture and society was formed in the Middle East. In the second phase the Middle Eastern Islamic culture was carried by conquerors, missionaries, and merchants to other parts of the world, where Islamic institutions again interacted with local ones to form new groups of different, but related, societies. Each of these societies was the product of two parent cultures, one Muslim and the other local. In the next phase of development each of these societies had a fateful encounter with European imperialism, economic power and cultural influences, and each responded in a unique way to form its mid-twentieth-century configuration.

After twenty more years, we are in a fourth phase. The third is not yet complete, but in this phase many of the “grandchildren” Islamic societies have reaffirmed their shared religious heritage. The revival is manifested in a wave of reformist, Salafi- or Wahhabi-type movements, which teach a return to the teachings of the Quran and the Prophet. It is manifest in widespread missionary, educational, and community-building movements, and above all it is manifest in political action. Muslim politics varies from pacific and cooperative to oppositional and violent, but the hallmark of the revival is the drive to create Islamic states in place of the failed secular states of the mid- and late twentieth century.

The rise of these movements has made it useful to prepare a second edition of this book. While there has been a wealth of scholarship on the early periods, I believe that the narrative and analysis presented in parts I and II of the first edition remains fundamentally sound. It is the third part that requires updating. The story of the burgeoning of these movements and their impact on Muslim communities and states must not only be brought to the present, but requires us to reevaluate recent history. Thus, in part III each chapter on national and regional histories has been brought up to date, and the story reintegrated to see the full sweep of developments from the middle of the century to the present. In the conclusion I have tried to reassess the balance of power between the secular legacy of the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries and the contemporary revival.

While the Islamic revival occupies much of our attention, it is not the only force operative in Muslim societies today. In the revised version I consider the continuing importance of secularization, the formation of modernist–Islamist hybrids, the maturation of new and more complex Islamic–national identities, and the emergence of a global Muslim identity. With so many forces in play, the Islamic revival is not likely to be the final phase in the evolution of Islamic societies.

In the course of revising the book, I have also filled a few important lacunae. There are new sections on Afghanistan and the Philippines, and expanded chapters on Islam in the Caucasus and Central Asia. There is a new chapter on Muslim peoples in Europe and America. The concluding section on women and gender has been enlarged and brought up to date, and there is a new discussion of the emergence of global Islamic identities and movements, including the recent terrorist events. The bibliography has been enlarged to include works dealing with the last two decades. While there are a number of smaller Muslim communities not considered in the text, the history is again up to date and comprehensive in its coverage.

In preparing the new edition I have again been blessed with the help of many friends and colleagues. To Marigold Acland, my Cambridge editor, I owe the inspiration for a new edition, the determination to awaken me to my duty, and helpful interventions throughout the process of revision. Murat Dagli tracked down data, maps, photos and bibliography. Scott Strauss helped with the research on Africa. Nancy Reynolds prepared a first draft of the new parts of the revised chapter on Islam in South Asia. Renate Holub and Laurence Michalak gave me good insights and helped correct the text for the chapter on Muslims in Europe and America. David Yaghoubian read through the whole of revised Part III and gave me innumerable suggestions for improvements. Saba Mahmood thoughtfully reviewed the conclusion. The chapter on women and gender has been revised with the help of and co-authored with Lisa Pollard. She has provided good counsel, insights, corrections, and new textual material. Nadine Ghammache skillfully prepared the manuscript.
Mary Starkey did very thoughtful and tasteful work in her copy editing, and Bennett Katrina Brown carefully checked part of the proofs. The Cambridge University Press editorial staff, Paul Watt and Karen Hildebrandt, have generously given their indispensable help in the preparation of the text. I am deeply grateful to each of them for their work, their collegiality, and their support. To my wife, Brenda Webster, I owe the happiness and peace of mind that allowed me to undertake this venture.

Maps 36 and 37 are based on maps printed in Le Monde diplomatique, November 2001. I would also like to thank the publishers of my previous work for their permission to print extracts and adaptations from the following articles:

Ira M. Lapidus
Berkeley, California
2002
PUBLISHER’S PREFACE

The Press Syndicate originally commissioned Ira Lapidus to write A History of Islamic Societies as a supplement to The Cambridge History of Islam, which was published in 1970 in two volumes. His would be a unique enterprise, a monumental work with the status of a Cambridge History, but by one hand and integrated by one coherent vision. Since its publication in 1988, it has surpassed all expectations. The book has become a classic work of history. This second edition brings this definitive and bestselling book to a new generation of readers.