

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics
Douglas A. Hicks
Frontmatter
More information

INEQUALITY AND CHRISTIAN ETHICS

Inequality and Christian Ethics provides a moral and empirical analysis of contemporary inequality. Drawing on Christian social ethics, political philosophy, and development economics, the book seeks to create an interdisciplinary conversation that illuminates not only the contemporary realities and trends of inequality, but their moral significance as well. It is necessary to examine and understand inequality in various forms – which the book maps out – including disparity in income, education, and health as well as differentials based on race, ethnicity, gender, and nationality. The book draws in particular on the theological ethics of Gustavo Gutiérrez and H. Richard Niebuhr to provide a Christian ethical approach to inequality and well-being. It considers the “capability approach” set forth by Amartya Sen, Nobel laureate in Economics. Sen’s framework helps to add specificity to what the commitment to “equality before God” would demand in social and economic relations.

DOUGLAS A. HICKS is Assistant Professor of Leadership Studies and Religion at the University of Richmond, Virginia, and he teaches courses in international leadership, social movements, ethics, and leadership and religious values. An ordained minister in the Presbyterian Church, he has participated in seminars in South Africa, Kenya, India, Guatemala, and Mexico. His articles have appeared in World Development, The Journal of Ecumenical Studies, and Sojourners and he contributed to the CD-ROM On Common Ground: World Religions in America.

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics
Douglas A. Hicks
Frontmatter
More information

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics
Douglas A. Hicks
Frontmatter
More information

NEW STUDIES IN CHRISTIAN ETHICS 16

General editor
Robin Gill

Editorial board
Stephen R. L. Clark, Stanley Hauerwas,
Robin W. Lovin

Christian ethics has increasingly assumed a central place within academic theology. At the same time the growing power and ambiguity of modern science and the rising dissatisfaction within the social sciences about claims to value-neutrality have prompted renewed interest in ethics within the secular academic world. There is, therefore, a need for studies in Christian ethics which, as well as being concerned with the relevance of Christian ethics to the present day secular debate, are well informed about parallel discussions in recent philosophy, science or social science. New Studies in Christian Ethics aims to provide books that do this at the highest intellectual level and demonstrate that Christian ethics can make a distinctive contribution to this debate – either in moral substance or in terms of underlying moral justifications.

Other titles published in the series

1. KIERAN CRONIN
Rights and Christian Ethics
2. IAN MCDONALD
Biblical Interpretation and Christian Ethics
3. JAMES MACKEY
Power and Christian Ethics
4. IAN S. MARKHAM
Plurality and Christian Ethics
5. JEAN PORTER
Moral Action and Christian Ethics
6. WILLIAM SCHWEIKER
Responsibility and Christian Ethics
7. E. CLINTON GARDNER
Justice and Christian Ethics

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics
Douglas A. Hicks
Frontmatter
More information

8. SUSAN PARSONS
Feminism and Christian Ethics
9. LISA SOWLE CAHILL
Sex, Gender and Christian Ethics
10. MICHAEL NORTHCOTT
The Environment and Christian Ethics
11. STANLEY RUDMAN
Concepts of Person and Christian Ethics
12. GARTH HALLETT
Priorities and Christian Ethics
13. DAVID FERGUSON
Community, Liberalism and Christian Ethics
14. PETER SEDGWICK
The Market Economy and Christian Ethics
15. ROBIN GILL
Churchgoing and Christian Ethics

Cambridge University Press

978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics

Douglas A. Hicks

Frontmatter

More information

INEQUALITY AND CHRISTIAN ETHICS

DOUGLAS A. HICKS

University of Richmond, Virginia

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge University Press
 978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics
 Douglas A. Hicks
 Frontmatter
More information

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS
 Cambridge, New York, Melbourne, Madrid, Cape Town,
 Singapore, São Paulo, Delhi, Tokyo, Mexico City

Cambridge University Press
 The Edinburgh Building, Cambridge CB2 8RU, UK

Published in the United States of America by Cambridge University Press, New York

www.cambridge.org
 Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9780521787543

© Douglas A. Hicks 2000

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2000

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloguing in Publication Data

Hicks, Douglas A.
 Inequality and Christian ethics / Douglas A. Hicks.
 p. cm. (New Studies in Christian Ethics; 16)
 Includes bibliographical references and index.
 ISBN 0 521 77253 2 (hardback)
 ISBN 0 521 78754 8 (paperback)
 1. Christian ethics. 2. Equality – Religious aspects – Christianity.
 I. Title. II. Series.
 BJ1275.H49 2000
 241–dc21 99-087146 CIP

ISBN 978-0-521-77253-2 Hardback
 ISBN 978-0-521-78754-3 Paperback

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication, and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate. Information regarding prices, travel timetables, and other factual information given in this work is correct at the time of first printing but Cambridge University Press does not guarantee the accuracy of such information thereafter.

We measure what we value.

Paula Rayman¹

[S]o long as no good, and then no single group of men and women, is dominant, so long as all value doesn't flow in one direction, we won't be counting and measuring all the time. Actual inequalities in this or that sphere will matter less than they do now; we will measure ourselves locally but won't need to fix our place in some larger and more general hierarchy. Or, more likely, some people will still need to do that and will look for some way of doing it, but enough of the rest of us will think this activity slightly ridiculous or beside the point.

Michael Walzer²

I do not mean for there to be relief for others and hardship for you, but rather it is a question of equality, with your present surplus going towards their lack. At another time, their surplus may be for your lack, so that there may be equality. As it is written, "The one who had much did not have too much, and the one who had little did not have too little."

2 Corinthians 8:13–15³

¹ Paula Rayman, "The New Economic Equation," presentation at the Center for the Study of Values in Public Life, Harvard Divinity School, November 19, 1996.

² Michael Walzer, "Response," in David Miller and Michael Walzer (eds.), Pluralism, Justice, and Equality (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1995), p. 285.

³ Author's translation; quoted biblical text is Exodus 16:18.

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics
Douglas A. Hicks
Frontmatter
More information

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics
Douglas A. Hicks
Frontmatter
More information

Contents

List of figures and tables	page xi
Acknowledgment	xiii
General editor’s preface	xv
Preface	xvii
List of abbreviations	xxii
 PART ONE CONTEXTUALIZING INEQUALITY	 I
1 Introduction: inequality matters	3
2 Inequality of what?: interdisciplinary perspectives	17
3 International contexts of inequality	43
4 Inequalities in the United States	64
 PART TWO CONSTRUCTING A CHRISTIAN ETHICAL APPROACH	 83
5 Christian ethics and theology in a pluralistic society	85
6 Equality before God in the thought of H. Richard Niebuhr	114
7 Equality before God in the thought of Gustavo Gutiérrez	140
8 Solidarity, selfhood, and social goods	167

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics
Douglas A. Hicks
Frontmatter
More information

x	List of contents
PART THREE	TRANSFORMING DISCOURSE, PERSONS, AND SOCIETIES	197
9	Expanding public discourse on inequality	199
10	An application: inequalities and human development	215
11	Conclusion: implications for inequality and Christian ethics	231
Appendix A	The Gini coefficient, inequality, and value-claims	247
Appendix B	Constructing Gini coefficients in income, education, and health/longevity	252
Appendix C	The construction of the HDI and the IAHD	257
	Bibliography	261
	Index	281

Figures and tables

FIGURES

3.1	Change in share of gross world product, for selected regions, 1970–1989	page 49
3.2	Changes in averages of Gini coefficients, by region and decade	52
4.1	US inequality of income, by families: Gini coefficient, 1947–1997	68
4.2	US inequality of education and health/longevity: Gini coefficients, 1947–1992	70
4.3	Gini coefficients in income, education, and health/longevity, US, as a proportion of the value in 1970	72
4.4	Median real household income, by race of householder, US, 1967–1997	74
4.5	Ratios of median household income, by race of householder, US, 1967–1997	74
A.1	The Lorenz curve	248

TABLES

3.1	Income ratios of richest quintile to poorest quintile, by region	50
3.2	Inequality measures for selected OECD countries	55
3.3	Gini coefficients and rankings in income, education, and health/longevity	60
4.1	“Time-lag” in high-school education, by race: percentage of US 25–29-year olds completing high school	76

xii	List of figures and tables
4.2	“Time-lag” in college education, by race: percentage of US 25–29-year olds completing college	77
4.3	“Time-lag” in infant mortality rates, by race of child	78
4.4	Median incomes, persons 25 and older, year-round, full-time workers, by sex, 1998	80
10.1	Conceptual framework for the HDI	218
10.2	Conceptual framework for the IAHD	223
10.3	The HDI and the IAHD for selected countries	224
10.4	Country rankings by HDI and IAHD	225

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics
Douglas A. Hicks
Frontmatter
More information

Acknowledgment

Parts of chapter 2, chapter 10, and the appendices are reprinted, in modified form, from World Development, vol. 25, no. 8, Douglas A. Hicks, “The Inequality-Adjusted Human Development Index: A Constructive Proposal,” pp. 1283–1298, copyright 1997, with permission from Elsevier Science.

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics
Douglas A. Hicks
Frontmatter
More information

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics
Douglas A. Hicks
Frontmatter
More information

General editor's preface

This is the sixteenth book in the series New Studies in Christian Ethics. The subject of inequality has concerned quite a number of theologians over the last few years. However, few if any of them show the sort of sophistication offered by Douglas Hicks in this book. In some respects Inequality and Christian Ethics is similar to the first book in the series, Kieran Cronin's Rights and Christian Ethics. The latter noticed that theologians often talk about "rights" but seldom show that they have a rigorous understanding of the detailed discussion of this issue in recent philosophy. Douglas Hicks has also noted a similar gap in the theological literature, although in this case in relation to the philosophical and economic discussion of equality and inequality.

There are further points of contact between Douglas Hicks's Inequality and Christian Ethics and other books in the series. Peter Sedgwick's The Market Economy and Christian Ethics is probably the closest. Both books offer a detailed account of socio-economics in the modern world, which is well informed and also careful not to claim too much in the name of Christian ethics. David Fergusson's Community, Liberalism and Christian Ethics offers a similar tension on the crucial issue of Christian distinctiveness in a pluralistic society, which differs significantly from the "ecclesial ethics" approach of theologians such as Stanley Hauerwas. Garth Hallett's Priorities and Christian Ethics shares Douglas Hicks's emphasis upon the needy and vulnerable: both are clearly motivated by a deep moral and theological perception of injustice in the world, as the opening pages of the present book make clear.

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics
Douglas A. Hicks
Frontmatter
More information

xvi

General editor's preface

Having identified inequality as a subject which needs to be explored in greater depth, Douglas Hicks proceeds to offer a theological account of this issue which makes full use of the rival theories of John Rawls and Amartya Sen. It is finally Sen's understanding of "equality of basic capability" which he finds to be the more fruitful and which he believes can be better related to Christian ethics. From an explicitly secular perspective Sen has nonetheless long argued that moral perception is inextricably involved in an adequate understanding of equality and inequality in the world. An equality of basic capability involves qualitative issues and not simply a quantitative provision to satisfy basic needs. Douglas Hicks argues that, once this is acknowledged, Christian ethics can contribute at three distinctive levels. First, it provides a moral vision and justification for how inequality matters and why public response is needed. Then it can offer moral examples of Christians, such as Martin Luther King and Desmond Tutu, who have actively striven against inequality. And, thirdly, Christian ethics provides a particularly compelling moral call to action: at best, Christian communities can transform lives and behavior towards a greater equality of capability.

This is a lucid, scholarly, and highly committed book. It works closely with the two aims of the series, namely to promote monographs in Christian ethics which engage centrally with the present secular moral debate at the highest possible intellectual level and, secondly, to encourage contributors to demonstrate that Christian ethics can make a distinctive contribution to this debate.

I commend Inequality and Christian Ethics very highly indeed. It sets new standards for theologians discussing equality and inequality, as well as offering a thoughtful challenge to secularists who see the need for values and action beyond analysis in this crucial area.

ROBIN GILL

Preface

Recently I had the opportunity to visit South Africa, five years into its transition towards legal and political democracy. South Africa's present-day reality is marked by rich cultural diversity and hope amidst turmoil. Most striking to this observer, as I was editing Inequality and Christian Ethics, was the degree of social and economic inequality. As this book will emphasize, inequality can be indicated in various ways; flying into Cape Town at dusk, I could see below me a "map" of inequality contrasting well-lighted neighborhoods with others that were nearly or completely dark. These latter areas were part of vast shanty-towns and squatter settlements that have taken root around Cape Town in the past few years. One of the most beautiful cities in the world, Cape Town has suburbs as "modern" and affluent as any, complete with Audi dealerships and "cyber-cafes." Yet they exist just miles away from the absolute poverty of cardboard and metal shelters that characterize nearly every city of the developing world.

It is no wonder that violence, fear, and social division permeate South African society. It is not an overstatement to say that people in the suburbs defend themselves against their predominantly black neighbors – with fences and even barbed wire protecting houses, businesses, and schools. Carrying a gun has become commonplace. Magazines include prominent advertisements for security companies and alarm systems. Affluent people will only leave their vehicles in guarded parking lots, and even "common" cars have complex alarm systems that cost money to install and time to operate. A few car owners have gone as far as designing "flame throwing" mechanisms in

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics
Douglas A. Hicks
Frontmatter
More information

xviii

Preface

order to deter or maim car-jackers. South Africa's transition toward democracy has laid bare the fact that social and economic inequality entails high costs for all people – citizens or foreigners, black, white, or “coloured,” rich or poor.

By the numbers as well as by such narrative descriptions, South Africa experiences one of the highest levels of income-based inequality in the world. Yet the realities described above are just an exaggerated version of the phenomena that have also occurred in the United States, the United Kingdom, and in the world as a whole. The United States, by most accounts, suffers the highest level of income-based inequality in the developed countries – and it has increased significantly over the past three decades. The United Kingdom saw the steepest rise in inequality across the 1980s and into the 1990s. Many if not most readers of this book live in the United States or the United Kingdom; these facts make the book of particular interest to them.

In an era of globalization, rapid changes have allowed some people access to the entire world by means of the internet and air travel, while the majority do not ever leave their own country. When the world population is grouped together as one whole, the level of income inequality is as high as inequality in any single nation of the world. That is, global inequality stands at roughly the same level as exists in South Africa. This reality should be of concern to anyone who speaks of, or seeks to create, a global village or even a sense of global solidarity. If the world actually operated as one community, it would face the kind of social and economic pressures that plague South Africa. Many people, including Christians and other persons of faith, have expressed moral concern about such realities and trends of inequality. I hope that this book helps to clarify and promote discussions about the moral, economic, and policy-related dimensions of inequality, and their interrelation. Sharpened understandings, in turn, should lead to more determined personal and public responses.

Conspicuous on these pages are ideas appropriated from professors at Davidson College, Duke University, and Harvard

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics
Douglas A. Hicks
Frontmatter
More information

Preface

xix

University: to them I owe the bulk of my intellectual debts and to them I offer my profound gratitude. At Davidson, Charles Ratliff moved me to consider the moral issues of economic distribution, posing the question (as only he could), “A rising tide may lift all boats, but what if you don’t have a boat?” Clark Ross and Peter Hess provided me with the essential framework and tools of economic analysis. David Kaylor introduced me to liberation theology and critical biblical scholarship. Lois “Sandy” Kemp awakened my conscience and intellect to injustice and deprivation in Latin America, and she taught me the Spanish I needed to hear at first hand the stories of people in Central America, Mexico, Puerto Rico, and migrant worker camps of North Carolina.

Professors at Duke Divinity School helped me to develop the vision and skills required for constructing the “theologically informed approach” presented on the following pages. Mary McClintock Fulkerson taught me, in the spirit of “Ecclesia reformata, semper reformanda,” to draw upon our shared faith tradition in order to address gender, race, and class inequalities. Frederick Herzog lived his theological passion and creativity. Without Thomas A. Langford I would be much less able “to think theologically.” Thomas E. McCollough, who continues to provide good counsel and insight, encouraged me to invite others to join in morally serious conversation and action.

The professors with whom I learned and taught at Harvard sharpened my skills and vision. Harvey Cox, Cornel West, Diana Eck, John Rawls, Stephen Marglin, and Elisabeth Schüssler Fiorenza each contributed to my thinking on one or more dimensions of this project. From across the Charles River at Boston College, David Hollenbach, S.J., was a crucial model for developing a Christian ethical approach to economic life.

My greatest intellectual debts accrued during this project will be all-too apparent on the pages that follow. I am grateful to have had the opportunity to study with Amartya Sen, whose insights into ethics and economics pervade my own perspective. Much of the normative work I undertake is an effort to evaluate critically and to expand constructively the proposals offered by Professor Sen. If I have deepened a conversation between his

Cambridge University Press
 978-0-521-78754-3 - Inequality and Christian Ethics
 Douglas A. Hicks
 Frontmatter
More information

xx

Preface

“capability approach” and Christian social ethics, I will be pleased. His earning of the Nobel Prize in Economic Sciences is a tribute to his work in social choice and welfare economics, including his pioneering books and articles on the complexities of inequality.

I express profound appreciation to Ronald F. Thiemann, whose counsel, proposals, and support have been invaluable. In my view, Dean Thiemann embodies his vision of a person of faith who contributes to society by drawing upon the analytical skills and moral perspectives at his disposal. His framework for religion in public life has helped to shape not just this work but my wider intellectual project.

I would also like to express my appreciation to friends and colleagues who have read and discussed significant portions of this work, either in dissertation or book form: Robert B. Bennett, Jr., Joanne B. Ciulla, Brent B. Coffin, Richard A. Couto, Stephen J. Davis, Mark Engler, Eric Gregory, Cynthia McIntyre, Douglas F. Ottati, Brian Palmer, Robert L. Payton, Ellie Pierce, Terry L. Price, and Christopher Steck, S.J. Lawrence C. Metzelaar assisted me in the graphic presentation of the socioeconomic data. Thanks are due to Cindy Venturini, Raegan Williams, and Angela Mims for their research assistance at the University of Richmond. I express a special word of gratitude to Robert A. Johnson, Jr., of Union Theological Seminary in Virginia and the Office of Theology and Worship of the Presbyterian Church (USA), for his timely and thoughtful comments.

The arguments were improved by responses to my work at meetings sponsored by the Duke University Department of Religion, the American Academy of Religion, the Yale-Harvard-Boston College Ethics Colloquium, the Harvard Religion and Society Colloquium, the Religion, Values, and the Economy Forum sponsored by Harvard’s Center for the Study of Values in Public Life, and the Leaders/Scholars Association. I benefited greatly from the welcome extended to me as an exchange scholar, during the 1997–98 year, by the Yale University graduate program in Religious Studies; I offer special thanks to Margaret Farley, Thomas Ogletree, and Gene Outka.

Preface

xxi

Substantial funding for dissertation research and writing was provided by two grants from the Mellon Foundation.

Faculty members at the Jepson School of Leadership Studies, at the University of Richmond, have been invaluable colleagues and conversation partners as we together seek to articulate and promote leadership as service, especially service to the most vulnerable citizens of our society and in the world as a whole. I hope that this work furthers the social and moral analysis needed to understand the human contexts that require effective and ethical leadership.

The parishioners of a number of communities of faith – especially Second Presbyterian Church of Indianapolis and Clarendon Hill Presbyterian Church of Somerville, Massachusetts – have enabled me to understand the equality before God as a form of communal practice and as a social vision. I express my gratitude to James D. Miller, William G. Enright, Joan B. Malick, Thomas W. Walker, Ray Bowden, and Patricia Budd Kepler for their ability to articulate the integration of faith commitments and intellectual inquiry.

I would like to state my appreciation to Kevin Taylor, Jan Chapman, and Michelle Williams at Cambridge University Press for their creative, constructive, and timely work in publishing this book.

Finally, I want to thank, for their support, Cathy and Michael Coscia, Judith Grant, Stuart Shapiro, Mary Malloy Dutkiewicz, Pat and Tom Kepler, Michael and Meg O’Leary, Stacy Marcus, Robert Johnson, Marianne Vermeer, and all of my family members – especially my parents Susan and Harry. Distributive justice and equality would mean little in a world without the friendship these wonderful people know how to share.

Abbreviations

ERP	Economic Report of the President
GDI	Gender-related development index
GDP	Gross domestic product
GNP	Gross national product
GWP	Gross world product
HDI	Human development index
HDR	Human Development Report
HPI	Human poverty index
IAHDI	Inequality-adjusted human development index
ILO	International Labour Organization
ISEW	Index of sustainable economic welfare
LIS	Luxembourg Income Study
MER	Market-based exchange rates
NCCB	National Conference of Catholic Bishops
NCES	National Center for Education Statistics
NGO	Non-governmental organization
OECD	Organization of Economic Cooperation and Development
PARE	Price adjustments of rates of exchange
PPP	Purchasing power parity
PQLI	Physical quality of life index
UN	United Nations
UNDP	United Nations Development Programme
UNESCO	United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization
WA	World Bank Atlas method
WDR	World Development Report