Language and Religion

Language and Religion offers an innovative theory of religion as a class of cultural representations, dependent on language to unify diverse capacities of the human mind. It argues that religion is widespread because it is implicit in the way the mind processes the world, as it determines what we ought to do, practically and morally, to achieve our goals. Focusing on the world religions, the book relates modern cognitive theories of language and communication to culture and its dissemination. It explains basic features of religion such as the supernatural, the normative, abstract and ideal theological concepts such as 'God', and religious feeling. It develops a linguistic theory, based on how utterances are understood, of metaphysical and moral 'mysteries' and their key role in thought and action. It shows how such concepts gain strength in the light of their successful use, and when tempered by criticism, can also have genuine authority.

WILLIAM DOWNES is currently Adjunct Professor of English and Linguistics, Glendon College, York University, Toronto, and Senior Fellow in the School of Language and Communication Studies, University of East Anglia, Norwich, UK. He has lectured in linguistics at the London School of Economics and Political Science, University of London, and the University of East Anglia.

Acknowledgements

I must acknowledge all the help I have received in this project. First of all, I want to thank my wife, Magdalen, who has also been both my editor and a wonderfully supportive first reader, for the hundreds of hours spent listening and arguing about every issue dealt with in the book. Jean Boase-Beier, John Collins and Alan Durant generously read early drafts and were most helpful and encouraging, pointing me to new material, explaining difficult issues and giving me the confidence to proceed. Thanks also to Ming-yu Tseng for introducing me to the literature of Buddhism and whose PhD on koans was the original impetus for this wider study of religion, Clive Matthews and Paul Chilton for their discussions, especially of modularity and metaphor, the Language, Linguistics and Translation Studies and the Philosophy Society research seminars at the University of East Anglia for attentive responses to my papers, and Andrew Winnard, Sarah Green and the very helpful anonymous readers from CUP. Thanks also to the UEA for two study leaves and the Arts and Humanities Research Board (AHRB) for financially supporting the project. Special thanks to Jim Benson for the many efforts he has made on my behalf that made this research possible, to all the staff at Glendon College, York University, who have made me very welcome and participated in my research seminars; to Victoria University in the University of Toronto for the Northrop Frye Fellowship and Massey College for a Senior Residency in 1999. Thanks to Bill Clarke, Snr, for the hours discussing religion and atheism and to Barry and Brenda Ross for inviting us to the pow-wows of the Algonquins of Pikwakanagan which initiated an interest in the revived First Nation spirituality. Dr Chris Gribble of the Writers' Centre Norwich and my son Matthew generously gave invaluable help with technology.

Finally, the amazing number and beauty of the mediaeval churches of Norwich were important to this research. These include St Peter Mancroft,

Sir Thomas Brownes' parish church, and tiny St Julian's with its cell where Julian of Norwich was enclosed. These places and the remarkable books, Julian's Showings and Brownes' Religio Medici, were instrumental in generating my respect for the quality of the minds of our ancestors whose lives were absorbed by their struggle with religious thinking.
