Australian Politics and Government

The Commonwealth, the States and the Territories

Australian Politics and Government is the first comprehensive comparative study of Australian state and Commonwealth governments and their politics for over forty years. In addition to major chapters on each state in the Australian federation, the book includes chapters on the Commonwealth government and the two self-governing territories, the Australian Capital Territory and the Northern Territory. These are supplemented by a chapter summarizing the distinctive characteristics of Australian government and its various components.

The chapters are written by leading scholars in the field, and use a common analytical framework to chart the evolution of each political system over the last century and to provide an understanding of their current operation. The book is supplemented by charts, an extensive bibliography and a comprehensive index. It is ideal as a reference on Australian government today, and as a textbook on Australian politics.

Australian Politics and Government has been written to link with the Australian Government and Politics website (http://elections.uwa.edu.au). This website is based on a searchable database which contains a wealth of information on Australian government and politics since 1890.

Jeremy Moon is Professor of Corporate Social Responsibility at the Nottingham University Business School. Previously he taught in the Department of Political Science at the University of Western Australia for fifteen years.

Campbell Sharman has been an Associate Professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of Western Australia for many years, and is currently at the University of British Columbia, Canada.
Contents

List of contributors vi
List of figures and tables ix
Acknowledgements xiii

1 Introduction – Campbell Sharman and Jeremy Moon 1
2 The Commonwealth – Patrick Weller and Jenny Fleming 12
3 New South Wales – Rodney Smith 41
4 Queensland – John Wanna 74
5 South Australia – Andrew Parkin 104
6 Tasmania – Aynsley Kellow 131
7 Victoria – Nicholas Economou, Brian Costar and Paul Strangio 154
8 Western Australia – Jeremy Moon and Campbell Sharman 183
9 Australian Capital Territory – John Warhurst 209
10 Northern Territory – Dean Jaensch 224
11 One System or Nine? – Campbell Sharman and Jeremy Moon 239

Note on Sources and Links to the Web 263
Notes 264
Appendix: Periods in Office 268
References 284
Index 307
Contributors

BRIAN COSTAR is Associate Professor in the School of Political and Social Inquiry at Monash University in Melbourne. His research and teaching interests are in the field of Australian politics, and especially the politics of regional Australia and the state of Victoria on which he has published extensively over the last twenty years. Books which he has co-authored or edited include The Kennett Revolution: Victorian Politics in the 1990s (1999), For Better or for Worse: The Federal Coalition (1994), Trials in Power: Cain, Kirner and Victoria 1982–1992 (1992), and Country to National: Australian Rural Politics and Beyond (1985).

NICK ECONOMOU is Senior Lecturer in the School of Political and Social Inquiry at Monash University in Melbourne. He has published on Australian politics with particular emphasis on state politics and state elections. He is co-author with Brian Costar of The Kennett Revolution: Victorian Politics in the 1990s (1999) and has published articles on environmental politics, federal elections, and the changing role of by-elections. He is also an occasional commentator on Victorian politics for the Australian Broadcasting Corporation and commercial radio stations in Melbourne.

JENNY FLEMING lectures in the School of Industrial Relations at Griffith University in Brisbane where she has been a Research Fellow in the Key Centre for Ethics, Law, Justice and Governance. Her research and publishing interests include public policy, the politics of criminal justice, police unionism and governance. She is co-editor of Motivating Ministers to Morality (2001) and Government Reformed: Values and New Political Institutions (2002).

DEAN JAENSCH is Adjunct Professor in the School of Political and International Studies at Flinders University. In his long and distinguished academic career, he has been author and co-author of more than twenty books on Australian politics, and has written widely on Northern Territory politics. His research interests are Australian politics, political parties and electoral behaviour. He is also a leading media commentator on Australian public affairs.

AYNSLEY KELLOW is Professor of Government at the University of Tasmania. A graduate of Otago University, his research interests include public policy, environmental politics and policy, and interest groups. After a period at the University of Tasmania, he taught at Deakin and Griffith universities, before returning to the University of

© Cambridge University Press www.cambridge.org

Jeremy Moon worked in the Political Science Department, University of Western Australia from 1985 to 2000 holding positions from Lecturer to Associate Professor and Head. His research interests in Australian politics focus on partisanship, the determinants of public policy and new forms of governance. He is currently Professor and Director, International Centre for Corporate Social Responsibility, Nottingham University.

Andrew Parkin is Professor of Political and International Studies at Flinders University, and editor of the Australian Journal of Political Science. Among his works on South Australian politics are his editorship of South Australia, Federalism and Public Policy (1996), The Bannon Decade (1992), and The Dunstan Decade (1981), and contributions to The Wakefield Companion to South Australian History (2001) and Flinders History of South Australia (1986). He has also published widely on urban politics and party politics in Australia and is the co-editor of the most successful introductory textbook on Australian politics.

Campbell Sharman is a former member of the Political Science Department at the University of Western Australia and is now a Senior Honorary Research Fellow with the School of Social and Cultural Studies. He also holds an honorary position with the Political Science Department of the University of British Columbia in Vancouver where he continues work on the Australian Government and Politics Database, and research on Australian and comparative politics.

Rodney Smith is Senior Lecturer in the Discipline of Government and International Relations at the University of Sydney. He is author of Australian Political Culture (2001) and The New South Wales State Election 1999 (2000) and editor of Politics in Australia (1997). His journal articles and chapters in edited books include studies of the New South Wales parliament during the Greiner–Fahey era, the New South Wales branch of the Australian Democrats and New South Wales political ethics and corruption. Among other things, he is currently working on a study of Bob Carr for a book on the New South Wales premiers.

Paul Strangio is a lecturer in the National Centre of Australian Studies of Monash University. His most recent book is Keeper of the Faith: A Biography of Jim Cairns (2002). Dr Strangio is a frequent media commentator on Australian and Victorian state politics.

John Wanna is Professor in the School of Politics and Public Policy at Griffith University. His research interests include government budgeting and expenditure management, public policy, government–business relations and parliamentary scrutiny. He has co-authored a number of books and articles on Australian politics including From Accounting to Accountability (2001), Public Expenditure Management in Australia (2000), and Public Policy In Australia (1993). He has also published widely on aspects of Queensland politics and government and co-edited The Goss Government: Promise And Performance of Labor in Queensland (1993).

John Warhurst is Professor of Political Science at the Australian National University and was previously Professor of Politics at the University of New England. He writes about Australian politics, particularly elections, political parties and constitutional politics. His two most recent publications are 2001: The Centenary Election (edited with Marian Simms, 2003) and Constitutional Politics: The Republic Referendum and the Future (edited with Malcolm Mackerras, 2003).

Patrick Weller AO has been Professor of Politics and Public Policy at Griffith University since 1984. He has degrees from Oxford University, the Australian National University and Griffith University. He is the author of a number of books on Australian and comparative politics, including Don't tell the Prime Minister (2002), Australia's Mandarins: The Frank and the Fearless? (2001), Malcolm Fraser PM (1989), First Among Equals: Prime Ministers in Westminster Systems (1985), and (with Michelle Grattan) Can Ministers Cope? (1981).
Figures and Tables

Figures

2.1 Commonwealth House of Representatives, general elections 1910–2001: vote share of ALP, Liberal and National parties (and their precursors), and minor parties (% of first preference vote) 22

2.2 Commonwealth House of Representatives, general elections 1910–2001: seat share of ALP, Liberal and National parties (and their precursors), minor parties and independents (%) 24

2.3 Commonwealth House of Representatives, general elections 1910–2001: vote share of two largest parties (% of first preference vote) 28

2.4 Commonwealth Senate, general elections 1910–2001: vote share of ALP, Liberal and National parties (and their precursors), and minor parties (% of first preference vote) 31

2.5 Commonwealth Senate, general elections 1910–2001: seat share of ALP, Liberal and National parties (and their precursors), minor parties and independents (%) 32

2.6 Commonwealth government: type and number of portfolios, 1901–2000 36

3.1 New South Wales Legislative Assembly, general elections 1891–1999: vote share of ALP, Liberal and National parties (and their precursors), and minor parties (% of first preference vote) 62

3.2 New South Wales Legislative Assembly, general elections 1891–1999: seat share of Liberal Party (and precursors), National (Country) Party, minor parties and independents (%) 67

3.3 New South Wales Legislative Assembly, general elections 1891–1999: seat share of ALP, Liberal and National parties (and their precursors), minor parties and independents (%) 69

4.1 Queensland Legislative Assembly, general elections 1893–2001: vote share of ALP, Liberal and National parties (and their precursors), and minor parties (% of first preference vote) 85

4.2 Queensland Legislative Assembly, general elections 1893–2001: seat share of ALP, Liberal and National parties (and their precursors), minor parties and independents (%) 86
4.3 Queensland Legislative Assembly, general elections 1893–2001: vote share of Liberal Party (and precursors), National (Country) Party, minor parties (% of first preference vote)

4.4 Queensland Legislative Assembly, general elections 1893–2001: seat share of Liberal Party (and precursors), National (Country) Party, minor parties and independents (%)

5.1 South Australian House of Assembly, general elections 1893–2002: vote share of ALP, Liberal Party (and precursors), and all other parties (% of first preference vote)

5.2 South Australian House of Assembly, general elections 1910–2002: vote share of two largest parties (% of first preference vote)

5.3 South Australian House of Assembly, general elections 1893–2002: seat share of ALP, Liberal Party (and precursors), National (Country) Party, minor parties and independents (%)

5.4 South Australian government: type and number of portfolios, 1889–2000

5.5 South Australian government: number of portfolios, Labor and non-Labor periods in office, 1910–2000

6.1 Tasmanian House of Assembly, general elections 1891–2002: vote share of ALP, Liberal Party (and precursors), and all other parties (% of first preference vote)

6.2 Tasmanian House of Assembly, general elections 1891–2002: seat share of ALP, Liberal Party (and precursors), and minor parties and independents (%)

6.3 Tasmanian House of Assembly, general elections 1912–2002: vote share of two largest parties (% of first preference vote)

6.4 Tasmanian government: type and number of portfolios, 1887–2000

7.1 Victorian Legislative Assembly, general elections 1892–1999: vote share of ALP, Liberal and National parties (and their precursors), and minor parties (% of first preference vote)

7.2 Victorian Legislative Assembly, general elections 1892–1999: vote share of Liberal Party (and precursors), National (Country) Party, and minor parties (% of first preference vote)

7.3 Victorian Legislative Assembly, general elections 1892–1999: seat share of Liberal Party (and precursors), National (Country) Party, minor parties and independents (%)

© Cambridge University Press
www.cambridge.org
7.4 Victorian Legislative Assembly, general elections 1892–1999: seat share of ALP, Liberal and National parties (and their precursors), minor parties and independents (%)

8.1 West Australian Legislative Assembly, general elections 1890–2001: vote share of ALP, Liberal and National parties (and their precursors), and minor parties (% of first preference vote)

8.2 West Australian Legislative Assembly, general elections 1890–2001: vote share of Liberal Party (and precursors), National (Country) Party, minor parties (% of first preference vote)

8.3 West Australian Legislative Assembly, general elections 1890–2001: seat share of ALP, Liberal and National parties (and their precursors), minor parties and independents (%)

8.4 West Australian Legislative Assembly, general elections 1890–2001: seat share of Liberal Party (and precursors), National (Country) Party, minor parties and independents (%)

9.1 Australian Capital Territory Assembly, general elections 1989–2001: vote share of ALP, Liberal Party, minor parties and independents (% of first preference vote)

9.2 Australian Capital Territory Assembly, general elections 1989–2001: vote share of Greens, other minor parties, and independents (% of first preference vote)

11.1 Average and range of support for the ALP by share of first preference vote (%), state and Commonwealth general elections, 1910–2001

11.2 Number of state governments with the same partisan colour as the Commonwealth government at 30 June 1910–2001
Tables

3.1 New South Wales Legislative Council, general elections 1978–1999: vote share (%) and seats won by party (n) 49
3.2 New South Wales Legislative Assembly: changes to the membership of the Assembly, 1856–2001 50
4.1 Queensland Legislative Assembly: voting systems used and governments formed after elections, 1893–2001 94
9.1 Australian Capital Territory: chief ministers, parties in government, parliamentary support for governments and periods in office, 1989–2001 218
11.1 Rae’s index of fractionalization for vote and seat shares, Commonwealth, State and Territory general elections, 1910–2002 245
11.2 Share of government, number and average length of period in office, ALP and non-ALP governments, 1910–2001 248
11.3 Alternation, number and average length of continuous periods in government, ALP and non-ALP governments, 1910–2001 251
11.4 Single-party, coalition and minority governments: parliamentary support of governments, 1910–2001 254
Acknowledgements

The idea for this book grew out of a research project started by the editors in 1995, when both of us were members of the Political Science Department at the University of Western Australia. The goal was to make a comparative analysis of the politics and government of the Australian states, and the project managed to gain funding from an Australian Research Council Large Grant in 1995. A component of the research was to set up a computer database which would permit systematic comparison of parties, representation and government in the states, based on the invaluable collection of information amassed by Colin Hughes and his associates at the Australian National University in the 1960s and published in A Handbook of Australian Government and Politics 1890–1964 (Hughes and Graham 1968) and its supplements (see Note on Sources and Links to the Web, page 263). As with most such projects, it proved to be more complicated and time consuming than we first thought. We were fortunate enough to gain further funding for the project from a National Council for the Centenary of Federation grant in 1999, through the History and Education Program. This enabled us to redesign what is now the Australian Government and Politics Project database and to produce the Australian Government and Politics website (http://elections.uwa.edu.au). The grant also prompted the planning of this volume and assisted in funding much of the research on which the book is based.

While we are happy to acknowledge the vital role played by the Australian Research Council and the National Council for the Centenary of Federation in funding the research on which this book is based, we would also like to acknowledge the continuing support of the University of Western Australia, and what is now the School of Social and Cultural Studies in the Faculty of Arts, Humanities and Social Sciences. The University’s administrative and financial support over the life of the project has been an essential component for its success and for the completion of this volume. In this respect, we would like to thank Linley Hill, the administrative officer for Political Science, for her unstinting helpfulness in all matters involving the administration of the project.

We would like to acknowledge the patience of the contributors as well as thanking them for their contributions; there must have been times when they doubted whether the volume would ever be brought to a conclusion. This might also be said of Peter Debus and Paul Watt at Cambridge University Press and we thank them and their colleagues for accommodating the delays to which this undertaking has been prone, and the complications of having authors and editors spread over three continents.

While the great bulk of the research for this volume has been undertaken at the University of Western Australia, most of the final editing and indexing has been undertaken in the Political Science Department at the University of British Columbia. We would like to thank the Department and its head, Richard Johnston, for their assistance. And we thank David Clune of the New South Wales Parliamentary Library, and Bruce Stone in Political Science at the University of Western Australia for providing some elusive references at short notice for the completion of the appendix and bibliography.

Jeremy Moon
Campbell Sharman