

Contents

List of illustrations [page ix]

Acknowledgements [xi]

Introduction [1]

1 Context [5]

Organicism [6]

Lyric cycles [9]

Self-reflexivity, fragments and Hoffmann's Kater Murr [16]

Textual coherence in the song-cycle canon [21]

Key sequence [25]

Key characteristics and other alternative approaches to tonal sequence [34]

2 Conception to publication [38]

Before composing: texts and notebooks [42]

From conception to arrangement: 'Heine cycles' [45]

Ordering for publication [57]

Titles and title pages [65]

Flower imagery [72]

3 Arrangement [76]

Plot archetypes: sorrow to comfort [78]

Narrative [85]

Op. 32 as narrative [91]

Op. 57 as narrative [98]

Narrative elements in other bouquets [102]

Self-reflexivity [107]

Alternatives to narrative: juxtaposition and resonance [115]

Tempo, closure and cyclic patterning [118]

'Wie Melodien' [129]

4 Performance [137]

Performance contexts [137]

Criteria in assembling a recital programme [141]

Gender and dramatic characterisation [146]

- Identification between singer and narrator [151]
- Tessitura, range and performance by several singers [153]
- Transposition [157]
- Performance and coherence in the Ophelia-Lieder [162]
- 5 Reception [168]
 - Reviews [171]
 - Responses of Brahms's acquaintances [174]
 - Identification of composer with narrator [178]
 - Dedicatory cycles and the composer's voice [185]
 - The graphic cycles of Max Klinger [189]
- 6 Cyclic intent [212]
- Notes* [220]
- Select bibliography* [245]
- General index* [254]
- Index of Brahms's solo Lieder and song collections* [262]
- Alphabetical list of titles and first lines of the texts of Brahms's solo Lieder* [266]