Contents

Acknowledgements

Part I Outline of the problem
1 Towards a social history of religion in modern Britain: secularisation theory, religious change and the fate of protestant England 3
2 Religion in the twilight zone: a narrative of religious decline and religious change in Britain, c. 1920–1960 29

Part II Disclosures of decline
3 The ‘soul of England’ in an ‘age of disintegration’: Dean Inge and the ‘trial of the churches’ in the wake of World War I 95
4 The strange death of puritan England 135
5 Social science and the discovery of a ‘post-protestant people’: Rowntree’s surveys of York and their other legacy 180

Part III Resistance, revival and resignation
6 The 1944 Education Act: a church–state perspective 211
7 Was there an English religious revival in the 1950s? 242
8 Slouching towards a secular society: expert analysis and lay opinion in the early 1960s 273
   Conclusion: the passing of protestant England 303

Index 317