Elizabeth Hewitt uncovers the centrality of letter-writing to antebellum American literature. She argues that many canonical American authors turned to the epistolary form as an idealized mode through which to consider the challenges of American democracy before the Civil War. The letter was the vital technology of social intercourse in the nineteenth century and was adopted as an exemplary genre in which authors from de Crèvecœur and Brockden Brown to Emerson, Fuller, Melville, Jacobs, Dickinson, and Whitman, could theorize the social and political themes that were so crucial to their respective literary projects. They interrogated the political possibilities of social intercourse through the practice and analysis of correspondence. Hewitt argues that although correspondence is generally only conceived as a biographical archive, it must instead be understood as a significant literary practice through which these authors made sense of social and political relations in the new nation.

Elizabeth Hewitt is Assistant Professor of English at the Ohio State University.
CAMBRIDGE STUDIES IN AMERICAN LITERATURE AND CULTURE

Editor
Ross Posnock, New York University

Founding Editor
Albert Gelpi, Stanford University

Advisory Board
Sacvan Bercovitch, Harvard University
Ronald Bush, St. John’s College, Oxford University
Wai Chee Dimock, Yale University
Albert Gelpi, Stanford University
Gordon Hutner, University of Kentucky
Walter Benn Michaels, University of Illinois, Chicago
Kenneth Warren, University of Chicago

Recent books in this series
146. ELIZABETH HEWITT
Correspondence and American Literature, 1770–1865
145. ANNA BRICKHOUSE
Transamerican Literary Relations and the Nineteenth-Century Public Sphere
144. ELIZA RICHARDS
Gender and the Poetics of Reception in Poe’s Circle
143. JENNIE A. KASSANOFF
Edith Wharton and the Politics of Race
147. JOHN McWILLIAMS
New England’s Crises and Cultural Memory: Literature, Politics, History, Religion, 1620–1860
141. SUSAN M. GRIFFIN
Anti-Catholicism and Nineteenth-Century Fiction
140. ROBERT E. ABRAMS
Landscape and Ideology in American Renaissance Literature
139. JOHN D. KERKERING
The Poetics of National and Racial Identity in Nineteenth-Century American Literature
138. MICHELE BIRNBAUM
Race, Work and Desire in American Literature, 1860–1930
137. RICHARD GRUSIN
Culture, Technology and the Creation of America’s National Parks
CORRESPONDENCE AND AMERICAN LITERATURE,
1770–1865

BY
ELIZABETH HEWITT
Ohio State University
Department of English
Columbus, Ohio

© Cambridge University Press
www.cambridge.org
For Jared, Eli, and Gideon
Contents

Acknowledgments
page viii

Abbreviations
x

1. Introduction: Universal letter-writers
   1 National letters
   2 Emerson and Fuller’s phenomenal letters
   3 Melville’s dead letters
   4 Jacobs’s letters from nowhere
   5 Dickinson’s lyrical letters
2. Conclusion: Whitman’s universal letters

Notes
188

Index
226
Acknowledgments

Any acknowledgment page is, of course, a public thank you letter, and so I begin rather self-consciously with this note of gratitude to the many who helped me write this book. At Johns Hopkins University, I was fortunate to work with Jonathan Goldberg, John Guillory, Allen Grossman, and most especially Sharon Cameron – each of them offered a professional and personal model to which I aspire. I have relied on the generous time and attention of many, and I would particularly like to thank Steve Fink, Elizabeth Renker, Susan Williams, Jim Phelan, Valerie Lee, Cannon Schmidt, Roxann Wheeler, David Brewer, Marlene Longenecker, Debra Moddelmog, Nan Johnson, Richard John, and Rebecca Morton. Fellowships from the Ohio State University, the Houghton Library, and the National Endowment for the Humanities were indispensable. I am also grateful to the librarians and staff at the American Antiquarian Society Library, the Houghton Library, the Amherst College Library, and the Ohio State University Library. Ross Posnock and the readers and editors at Cambridge University Press gave the book generous and thoughtful attention: their invaluable suggestions made the book much better. For celebratory distractions and tremendous faith, I thank Susan Gardner, Bruce Brooks, Olana Brooks, Natsu Ihill, Andrew Gardner, Trebbe Johnson, and most of all, my parents, Myrna Livingston and Jack Hewitt whose love and pride always sustains me. For the “dear talking times,” I’ll never repay the debt owed to Amanpal Garcha, Jonathan Kramnick, Stephen Trask, and Michael Trask. Finally, although this book strenuously critiques the possibility of perfect correspondence, my own life belies the argument. What Melville wanted in Hawthorne, I have in Jared Gardner. This book (and everything else I do) has been written on the “endless riband of foolescap” that lies between us. The book was conceived with Elijah Percy-Jerome Gardner, and five years later it was finished just as Gideon Rafael Hewitt was born. It is to Jared, Eli, and Gideon that this book is dedicated.

viii
Acknowledgments

Portions of Chapter 3 are reprinted from The Yale Journal of Criticism 12.2 (1999), by permission of Yale University and the Johns Hopkins University Press; and portions of Chapter 5 are reprinted from Arizona Quarterly 52.1 (Spring 1996), by permission of the Regents of the University of Arizona.
Abbreviations

C  Herman Melville, Correspondence, ed. Lynn Horth (Chicago: Northwestern University Press, 1993).
LRWE  The Letters of Ralph Waldo Emerson, ed. Ralph L. Rusk, 10 vols. (New York: Columbia University Press, 1939–).