Cultural exchange, the dynamic give-and-take between two or more cultures, has become a distinguishing feature of modern Europe. This was already an important feature to the elites of the fifteenth, sixteenth and seventeenth centuries and it played a central role in their fashioning of self. The cultures these elites exchanged and often integrated with their own were both material and immaterial; they included palaces, city-dwellings, paintings, sculptures, ceramics, dresses and jewellery, but also gestures, ways of sitting, standing and walking, and dances. In this innovative and well-illustrated volume all this lively exchange is traced from Bruges, Augsburg and Istanbul to Italy; from Italy to Paris, Amsterdam, Dresden, Novgorod and Moscow, and even from Brazil to Rouen. This volume, which reveals how a first European identity was forged, will appeal to cultural and art historians, as well as social and cultural anthropologists.

Herman Roodenburg is Head of the Department of Ethnology at the Meertens Institute, Amsterdam, and Professor of Cultural History at the Catholic University of Leuven. His latest publications in English include The Eloquence of the Body: Studies on Gesture in the Dutch Republic (2004) and, as co-editor with Pieter Spierenburg, Social Control in Europe, 1500–1800 (2004).
At a time when the enlarged European Community asserts the humanist values uniting its members, these volumes of essays by leading scholars from twelve countries seek to uncover the deep but hidden unities shaping a common European past. These volumes examine the domains of religion, the city, communication and information, and the conception of man and the use of material goods, identifying the links which endured and were strengthened through ceaseless cultural exchanges, even during this time of endless wars and religious disputes. Volume I examines the role of religion as a vehicle for cultural exchange. Volume II surveys the reception of foreigners within the cities of early modern Europe. Volume III explores the place of information and communication in early modern Europe. Volume IV reveals how cultural exchange played a central role in the fashioning of a first European identity.

Volumes in the series

I Religion and Cultural Exchange in Europe, 1400–1700
Edited by Heinz Schilling and István György Tóth

II Cities and Cultural Exchange in Europe, 1400–1700
Edited by Donatella Calabi and Stephen Turk Christensen

III Correspondence and Cultural Exchange in Europe, 1400–1700
Edited by Francisco Bethencourt and Florike Egmond

IV Forging European Identities, 1400–1700
Edited by Herman Roodenburg
CULTURAL EXCHANGE IN EARLY MODERN EUROPE

VOLUME IV

Forging European Identities, 1400–1700

EDITED BY
HERMAN ROODENBURG

WITH AN INTRODUCTORY ESSAY BY
BERND ROECK
Contents

List of illustrations  ix
Notes on contributors  xviii
General editor’s preface  xxi
Acknowledgements  xxv

Introduction  1
Bernd Roeck

1 The Baltic ceramic market 1200–1600: measuring Hanseatic cultural transfer and resistance  30
David Gaimster

2 Between Italy and Moscow: cultural crossroads and the culture of exchange  59
Evelyn Welch

3 Netherlandish painting and early Renaissance Italy: artistic rapports in a historiographical perspective  100
Bernard Aikema

4 Cultural transfer between Venice and the Ottomans in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries  138
Deborah Howard

5 Wandering objects, migrating artists: the appropriation of Italian Renaissance art by German courts in the sixteenth century  178
Barbara Marx
Contents

6 The dressed body: the moulding of identities in sixteenth-century France 227
   Isabelle Pareys

7 Clothing and cultural exchange in Renaissance Germany 258
   Ulinka Rublack

8 Gesture and comportment: diversity and uniformity 289
   Dilwyn Knox

9 The exchange of dance cultures in Renaissance Europe: Italy, France and abroad 308
   Marina Nordera

10 Dancing in the Dutch Republic: the uses of bodily memory 329
    Herman Roodenburg

11 The imaginative recreation of overseas cultures in western European pageants in the sixteenth to seventeenth centuries 361
    Johan Verberckmoes

Bibliography 381
Index 428
Illustrations

Maps

1. Map of the Baltic region page 31
2. World map, 1522 63
3. Map of the Kremlin, 1662 72

Figures

1. Staudeplan of 1647 showing an aerial view of Stralsund, north Germany, with street plan and gabled brick houses typical of the Hanseatic trading town (photo: Kulturhistorisches Museum, Stralsund, after original in National Archives, Stockholm) 33
2. Group of imported fifteenth-century German stoneware from the royal Danish castle at Falsterbo, Scania, South Sweden. Lund University Historical Museum, inv. LUHM 17300:xii 39
Illustrations

5. Italo-South Netherlands maiolica jug painted in blue and yellow in the centre with a medallion containing a Fool’s Head. Found in a latrine context dating to the second half of the sixteenth century on the Burgwall, Rostock, north Germany. Hansestadt Rostock, inv. HRO 146/1985/162

6. Pre-Reformation glazed earthenware stove-tile moulded with St Anne and the Virgin. Late fifteenth century. Excavated in Lübeck, north Germany. Lübeck, Museum für Kunst und Kulturgeschichte, inv. 4558

8. Carved and painted wooden panel from the pew-stall of the Stralsund Novgorod traders in the church of St Nicholas, Stralsund, North Germany, c.1400 (photo: Kulturhistorisches Museum, Stralsund)

10. The Cathedral of the Dormition, Kremlin, Moscow, c.1476

11. Coin minted by Aristotele Fioravanti for Ivan III, c.1476

12. The Kremlin walls and towers photographed in 1912

13. The Castello Sforzesco, Milan, before its reconstruction in the 1880s

14. Palace of the Facets or Granovitaya Palata, Kremlin, Moscow

15. Palace of the Facets or Granovitaya Palata, Kremlin, Moscow, detail of façade

16. Biagio Rosetti, Palazzo dei Diamanti, Ferrara, c.1493

17. Biagio Rosetti, Palazzo dei Diamanti, Ferrara, c.1493, detail
Illustrations

18. Book of the Election to the Throne of the Tsar and Great Prince Michal Fëdorovič (1672–78), detail showing the Palace of the Facets 90
19. Palace of the Facets or Granovitaya Palata, Kremlin, Moscow, view of the audience chamber 91
20. Palace of the Facets or Granovitaya Palata, Kremlin, Moscow, view of the audience chamber 91
21. Alvise Nuovi, Cathedral of Archangel Michael, Kremlin, Moscow 92
22. Alvise Nuovi, Cathedral of Archangel Michael, Kremlin, Moscow, detail of portal 93
23. Alvise Nuovi, Cathedral of Archangel Michael, Kremlin, Moscow, detail of stonework on portal 94
24. Alvise Nuovi, Cathedral of Archangel Michael, Kremlin, Moscow, detail of vase motif 95
25. Bergamo, Colleoni Chapel, detail of exterior stonework, c.1470 96
26. Pavia, façade of the Certosa of Pavia, detail of exterior stonework, c.1480–1500 97
27. View of Kremlin with the turrets of St Basil, photograph taken in 1912 98
29. Buonaccorso Ghiberti, Landscape with Mill, detail from Zibaldone, fol. 35. Florence, Biblioteca Nazionale 113
32. Giovanni Bellini, St Francis in a Landscape. New York, Frick Collection 119
33. Jan van Eyck (workshop of), Crucifixion. Venice, Galleria Giorgio Franchetti at the Ca’ d’Oro 121
34. Antonello da Messina, Crucifixion. Antwerp, Museum voor Schone Kunsten 124
35. Giovanni Bellini, Crucifixion. Prato, Cariprato 126
38. Gabriele and Carletto Caliari, The Reception of the Persian Ambassador, Sala delle Quattro Porte, Palazzo Ducale, Venice (photo: Cameraphoto, Venice) 145
41. Box and cover, signed on rim by ‘Master Mahmud’, sixteenth century. London, Courtauld Institute of Art 163
44. Celadon green ceramic dish with incised slipware decoration, workshop of Jacomo da Pesaro, signed and dated 1542. London, Wallace Collection 169
46. Pilgrim flask in enamelled glass, Murano, c.1500. Los Angeles, Getty Museum, inv. 84 DK 538 173
47. Il volo del Turco, anonymous woodcut, Venice, 1543–53. Venice, Museo Correr 176
Illustrations

50. Albrecht Dürer, Frederick III (the Wise), Elector of Saxony, 1524, engraving 186

51. Valentin Wagner, Warrior, 1610 or later, copy from the lost fresco by Benedetto Tola, pen and red chalk drawing. Dresden, Staatliche Kunstsammlungen, Kupferstich-Kabinett, Ca 82, no. 22 194

58. J. and F. Clouet, François Ier, c.1535, oil on wood. Paris, Musée du Louvre (photo: Réunion des Musées Nationaux) 231
Illustrations

60. F. Clouet, Charles IX, 1566, oil on wood, detail. Vienna, Kunsthistorisches Museum 238

64. ‘La damoyeselle’, F. Desprez, Receuil de la diversité des habits (Paris: Richard Breton, 1567), fol. 5r. Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale de France 244

67. Siehe Welt, broadsheet of a strange fish found near Gottorf in Schleswig-Holstein in 1599. Reproduced by kind permission of the Universitäts- und Landesbibliothek Darmstadt 262

Illustrations

72. Sigmund Held, Kleiderbuch, around 1550: stones are brought to Nuremberg. Reproduced by kind permission of the Staatliche Museen zu Berlin, Kunstbibliothek

73. Depiction of a Pappenheimer who cleaned Nuremberg’s ‘secret places’, i.e. toilets. Reproduced by kind permission of the Staatliche Museen zu Berlin, Kunstbibliothek

74. Depiction of a man who repairs roof tiles in Nuremberg. Reproduced by kind permission of the Staatliche Museen zu Berlin, Kunstbibliothek

75. Depiction of a peasant who has turned over a cart with apples and pears. Reproduced by kind permission of the Staatliche Museen zu Berlin, Kunstbibliothek

76. Leipzig embroidery. Reproduced by kind permission of the Grassi Museum für Kunsthandwerk, Leipzig

77. Depiction of a man and two women dancing, from Guglielmo Ebreo da Pesaro, De Arte Seu Arte Tripudii, manuscript 1463. Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale de France, f. ital. 973, fol. 21v

79. Depiction of men and women dancing, from [Cesare Negri], Le Gratie d’Amore di Cesare Negri Milanese, detto il Trombone, Professore di ballare, Opera Nova, et
Illustrations

Vaghissima, divisa in Tre Trattati (Milan: Battista Piccaglia, 1602; reprint Bologna 1969) 317

80. Adriaen Hanneman, Constantijn Huygens Surrounded by his Five Children, 1639. The Hague, Koninklijk Kabinet van Schilderijen Mauritshuis 342

82. A Brazilian panorama at the Seine in Rouen, woodcut in C’est la Deduction du sumptueux ordre plaisantz spectacles et magnifiques theatres dresss, et exhibes par les citoyens de Rouen ville Metropolitaine du pays de Normandie [. . .] (Rouen: chez Robert le Hoy, Robert et Iehan dictz du Gord, 1551) 366

85. Ethiopians and people in Brazilian plumes in the Joyous Entry of Ernst, Archduke of Austria, into Antwerp, 14 June 1594, lower right corner of etching Ludi equestres apparatissimi in: Descriptio publicae gratulationis, spectaculorum et ludorum, in adventu serenis. principis Ernesti Archiducis Austriae . . . (Antwerp: ex officina Plantiniana, 1595) (facsimile New York: Benjamin Blom, 1970) 373
Illustrations

87. Frans II Francken, A Theatre Performance on the Occasion of the Canonisation of Ignatius Loyola and Francis Xavier in July 1622 in Antwerp (present whereabouts unknown)
Notes on contributors

Deborah Howard is Professor of Architectural History at the University of Cambridge, where she is a Fellow of St John’s College. Her books include Venice and the East: The Impact of the Islamic World on Venetian Architecture 1100–1500 (2000) and The Architectural History of Venice, revised enlarged edition (2002).

Barbara Marx is Professor of Cultural History at the University of Dresden and editor of Elbflorenz: Italienische Präsenz in Dresden.
Notes on contributors

MARINA NORDERA is Professor at the Dance Department of Nice University, author of La donna in ballo: danza e genere nella prima età moderna (2006) and co-editor with Susanne Franco of Dance Discourses: Keywords for Research Methodology (2006) (original title: I discorsi della danza: parole chiave per una metodologia della ricerca, published 2005).

ISABELLE PARESYS is Lecturer in Early Modern History at the University of Charles-de-Gaulle-Lille III. Currently her research focuses on the dressed and ornamented body in Renaissance France. She is a coordinator of the national research programme Paraître et apparence en Europe occidentale du Moyen Âge à nos jours.

BERND ROECK is Professor of Early Modern History at the University of Zurich. He is the author of numerous books and essays on the social and cultural history of Germany and Italy from the Renaissance to the nineteenth century. His most recent book is Das historische Auge: Kunstwerke als Zeugen ihrer Zeit (2005). His next book will be a study on the Flagellation of Piero della Francesca.

HERMAN ROODENBURG is Head of the Department of Ethnology at the Meertens Institute, Amsterdam, and Professor of Cultural History at the Catholic University of Leuven. Among his recent English publications are The Eloquence of the Body: Studies on Gesture in the Dutch Republic (2004) and, as co-editor with Pieter Spierenburg, Social Control in Europe, 1500–1800 (2004).

ULINKA RUBLACK lectures on the history of early modern Europe at Cambridge University and is a Fellow of St John’s College. Her most recent books are Reformation Europe (2005), Reformation in Europe (2003), The Crimes of Women in Early Modern Germany (1999), and, as editor, Gender in Early Modern German History (2002). She is currently researching two projects, entitled The Politics of Appearances in Early Modern Europe and Locating Luther, and is editing A Concise Companion to History (Oxford: Blackwell).
Notes on contributors

Johan Verberckmoes is Professor in Early Modern History at the Catholic University of Leuven. He teaches cultural history and does research on laughter, leisure and pleasure in the early modern world. He is the author of Laughter, Jestbooks and Society in the Spanish Netherlands (1999).

Evelyn Welch, Professor of Renaissance Studies at Queen Mary, University of London, is the author of Shopping in the Renaissance. Consumer Cultures in Italy, 1400–1600 (2005); Art in Renaissance Italy (2000) and Art and Authority in Renaissance Milan (1995). She is currently completing a volume on pharmaceutical practices in fifteenth-century Italy with Dr James Shaw and editing a collection of essays on Renaissance consumption with Dr Michelle O’Malley for Cambridge University Press.
General editor’s preface

The four volumes of this series represent the synthesis of works from ‘Cultural Exchange in Europe, 1400–1700’, a research programme sponsored by the European Science Foundation and financed by eighteen councils for research from seventeen countries. The adventure began in January 1997 when its originators decided to conduct an international investigation of the cultural roots of modern Europe. Research has increased considerably since this programme began and identifying the origins of the European identity has become a fundamental issue at the dawn of the twenty-first century.

Ultimately, our programme brought together over sixty regular members, plus a few dozen individuals who participated in one or more of our group meetings. It was a real linguistic Tower of Babel including specialists from various disciplines: history, art, architecture, theatre, literature, linguistics, folklore, clothing and dance. We have recruited well beyond the borders of the European Union, from St Petersburg to Chicago by way of Istanbul, although it was not always possible for every geographical location to be fully represented in each of our four groups.

This series is devoted to four major themes: religion; the city; communication and information; the conception of man and the use of material goods. The four volumes collectively include about a third of the papers presented throughout the programme. Most have been discussed collectively, revised, and sometimes rewritten.

Many other contributions prepared for this programme have appeared or will appear elsewhere: Eszter Andor and István György Tóth (eds.), Frontiers of Faith: Religious Exchange and the Constitution of Religious Identities, 1400–1750 (Budapest: Central European University/ESF, 2001); José Pedro Paiva (ed.), Religious Ceremonials and...
General editor’s preface

It was not always easy to conceptualise our theme collectively. The most difficult and time-consuming task was to get scholars to understand each other unambiguously when employing such apparently clear concepts as ‘culture’, which means different things in different languages and cultural traditions. Our first major task was simply to discover whether or not a European culture existed between 1400 and 1700, an intensely conflictual and profoundly tragic period which seemed to be characterised by ruptures rather than creation. From 1517, when Luther broke with Roman Catholicism, until the Peace of Westphalia in 1648, a series of terrible religious wars drowned the continent in blood, ending the medieval dream of a united Christendom. This age of intolerance was also one of fundamental inequality, particularly with respect to birth and sex, because any woman was considered fundamentally inferior to any man. Not only was the continent divided into at least five different cultural areas – the Atlantic, the Baltic, the Mediterranean, central Europe and eastern Europe – but also, and everywhere, those frontiers established in men’s minds – both visible and invisible – conflicted with any residual hopes of unity, whether expressed in terms of imperial ideology, papal universalism, or Thomas More’s humanistic Utopia, all of them swept away after 1520 by a wave of persecutions.2

And yet this very same Europe also bequeathed us powerful roots for the slow and difficult construction of a collective sensibility. Our research has unearthed traces of underlying unities, despite (or because of) formidable obstacles. This stubborn growth in some ways resembled an earlier process described by a prominent medievalist as the ‘Europeanization of Europe’.3 They have given substance and meaning to my working hypothesis: that European culture from 1400 to 1700 contained expressions of hidden cohesion against a background of intense conflicts. If those conflicts were destabilising, they also created a dialectic which contributed to the overall advance of European civilisation. Following Norbert Elias’s argument, I believe that every human society is constantly seeking to attain a ‘balance of power’ through a mechanism of ‘reciprocal dependency’ which produces a clear evolutionary trend. Culture is a symbolic arena for both collective negotiations and the fashioning of the Self. The enormous importance of the Self in today’s Europe (and in the United States) is the result of a major cultural change which began during the Renaissance. In the face of the tragedy of real life, this new individualism provided a fresh means of expressing the continent’s collective vitality and produced a growing conviction of its superiority and differences from all other places and people in the world.

Images: Power and Social Meaning (1400–1750) (Coimbra: Palimage, 2002). A volume on translations will be edited by Ronnie Po-Chia Hsia.

The ‘culture’ analysed in this series may be defined as that which simultaneously holds a society together and distinguishes it from other societies. If the Europe of 1400–1700 had little obvious regard for human rights, it did at least prefigure the time when they would be important. The humanistic lights which glimmered from time to time in the two dark and bloodstained centuries after 1520 were never to be completely extinguished. The Enlightenment revived them and honoured their Renaissance origins. But the tragic events that polluted its soil during the first half of the twentieth century proved that the Old Continent was not yet fully free from intolerance and persecution.

I should like to thank Wim Blockmans, who warmly supported the creation of this research programme; the European Science Foundation for its constant help; the eighteen institutions which provided generous funding over four years; all the scholars who participated in the experience, notably E. William Monter without whom this series would probably not have been published, and the late István György Tóth, codirector of volume 1, who passed away unexpectedly on 14 July 2005; and last but not least Cambridge University Press for producing four superb books proving the great vitality of past and present European culture.

7 Austria: Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften; Fonds zur Förderung der wissenschaftlichen Forschung (FWF); Belgium: Fonds National de la Recherche Scientifique (FNRS) / Fonds voor Wetenschappelijk Onderzoek – Vlaanderen
General editor’s preface

Robert Muchembled
Chair of the ESF programme
‘Cultural Exchange in Europe, 1400–1700’

(FWO); Denmark: Statens Humanistiske Forskningsråd; Finland: Suomen Akatemia / Finlands Akademi; Germany: Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft (DFG); Greece: National Hellenic Research Foundation (NHRF); Hungary: Hungarian Academy of Sciences; Italy: Consiglio Nazionale delle Ricerche (CNR); Netherlands: Nederlandse Organisatie voor Wetenschappelijk Onderzoek (NWO); Norway: Norges Forskningsråd; Poland: Polska Akademia Nauk (PAN); Portugal: Instituto de Cooperação Científica e Tecnológica Internacional (ICCTI); Slovenia: The Slovenian Science Foundation; Spain: Consejo Superior de Investigaciones Científicas (CSIC); Sweden: Humanistik Samhällsvetenskapliga Forskningsrådet (HSFR) / Kungliga Vitterhets Historie och Antikvitets Akademien (KVHAA); Switzerland: Schweizerischer Nationalfonds zur Förderung der Wissenschaftlichen Forschung (SNF); United Kingdom: The British Academy.
Acknowledgements

This volume results from the project ‘Cultural Exchange in Europe 1400–1700’, for which Wim Blockmans and Robert Muchembled took the initiative. The project was generously funded by the European Science Foundation as one of its Humanities programmes. In the course of the project the contributions were discussed in five successive meetings: in Naples, Stockholm, Brighton, Amsterdam and Zurich. The editor greatly appreciates the support given by the ESF and by the various universities at which the conferences were hosted. I am especially grateful to Robert Muchembled, William Monter (also for his much-needed corrections to the final versions of the translations), Peter Burke, Florike Egmond, Ruth Mohrmann, Heinz Schilling, Marianne Marcussen and Willmar Sauter. I am also grateful to Bernd Roeck for organising the meeting in Zurich, and to Evelyn Welch for organising the one in Brighton. Finally, I would like to thank Daniel Miller and Barbara Kirshenblatt-Gimblett for their stimulating and helpful comments at the Brighton meeting.