This book is about personal names, something of abiding interest to specialists and lay readers alike. More than one million people have checked the American Name Society website since 1996, for instance. Many philosophers and linguists suggest that names are “just” labels, but parents internationally are determined to get their children’s names “right.” Personal names may be given, lost, traded, stolen, and inherited. This collection of essays provides comparative ethnography through which we examine the politics of naming; the extent to which names may be property-like; and the power of names themselves, both to fix and to destabilize personal identity. Our purpose is not only to renew anthropological attention to names and naming, but to show how this intersects with current interests in political processes, the relation between bodies and personal identities, ritual and daily social life.

Gabriele vom Bruck is currently a lecturer in the Department of Social Anthropology at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. She has completed extended research in the Republic of Yemen.

Barbara Bodenhorn is a Newton Trust Lecturer in Social Anthropology and a Fellow of Pembroke College at the University of Cambridge. She has worked with Inupiat in northern Alaska since 1980, publishing on kinship, economic relations, gender, and knowledge systems. Her current research focuses on languages of risk and institutionalized decision-making processes in Mexico as well as the Arctic.
The Anthropology of Names and Naming

Edited by

GABRIELE VOM BRUCK
School of Oriental and African Studies

BARBARA BODENHORN
University of Cambridge
Contents

Contributors page vii

Preface and Acknowledgments xi

1. “Entangled in Histories”: An Introduction to the Anthropology of Names and Naming
   Barbara Bodenhorn and Gabriele vom Bruck 1

2. “Your Child Deserves a Name”: Possessive Individualism and the Politics of Memory in Pregnancy Loss
   Linda Layne 31

3. Why the Dead Do Not Bear Names: The Orokaiva Name System
   André Iteanu 51

4. The Substance of Northwest Amazonian Names
   Stephen Hugh-Jones 73

5. Teknonymy and the Evocation of the “Social” Among the Zafimaniry of Madagascar
   Maurice Bloch 97

6. What’s in a Name? Name Bestowal and the Identity of Spirits in Mayotte and Northwest Madagascar
   Michael Lambek 115

7. Calling into Being: Naming and Speaking Names on Alaska’s North Slope
   Barbara Bodenhorn 139

8. On Being Named and Not Named: Authority, Persons, and Their Names in Mongolia
   Caroline Humphrey 157
CONTENTS

9. Injurious Names: Naming, Disavowal, and Recuperation in Contexts of Slavery and Emancipation  177
   Susan Benson

10. Where Names Fall Short: Names as Performances in Contemporary Urban South Africa  200
    Thomas Blom Hansen

11. Names as Bodily Signs  225
    Gabriele vom Bruck

Bibliography  251
Index  271
Contributors

SUSAN BENSON was a Fellow of New Hall, Cambridge. She had a long-standing interest in questions of race and identity, gender, and the body. She is the author of Ambiguous Ethnicity: Interracial Families in London (1981) and of articles on images of race and ethnicity in public discourse in the United Kingdom, and on bodily practices such as tattooing. Her recent research in Ghana centered on past and present African American/Ghanian engagements with the legacy of slavery, primarily through tourism.

MAURICE BLOCH is Professor of Anthropology at the London School of Economics and Political Science. He has conducted extensive research in Madagascar. His current research interests focus generally on cognitive anthropology as well as the anthropology of religion. Recent books include Prey into Hunter (1992), How We Think They Think (1998), and Essay on Cultural Transmission (2005).

BARBARA BODENHORN is a Newton Trust Lecturer in Social Anthropology and a Fellow of Pembroke College at the University of Cambridge. She has worked with Inupiat in northern Alaska since 1980, publishing on kinship, economic relations, gender, and knowledge systems. Her current research focuses on languages of risk and institutionalized decision-making processes in Mexico as well as the Arctic.

GABRIELE VOM BRUCK is a lecturer in Anthropology at the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London. She has conducted fieldwork in Yemen and Britain. Her interests include elites, religion and politics, gender and memory. She has published on these and related issues.
CONTRIBUTORS

THOMAS BLOM HANSEN is Professor of Anthropology at Yale University. He has carried out fieldwork in India and on Indians in South Africa. He has published articles on masculinity and violence as well as on secularism. His books include: The Saffron Wave: Democracy and Hindu Nationalism in Modern India (1999); Wages of Violence: Naming and Identity in Post-Colonial Bombay (2001); with Finn Stepputat, States of Imagination: Ethnographic Explorations of the Postcolonial State (2001), and, with Finn Stepputat, Sovereign Bodies: Citizens, Migrants and States in the Postcolonial World (2005).

STEPHEN HUGH-JONES is a Senior Lecturer in Anthropology and a Fellow of King’s College at the University of Cambridge who has conducted extensive research in Amazonia. Recent edited volumes include, with J. Carsten, About the House: Lévi-Strauss and Beyond (1995) and, with C. Humphrey, Barter, Exchange and Value: An Anthropological Approach (1992). Ethnographic films include A Small Family Business (1990). Recent articles include publications on gender, history, houses, and house societies. Current interests include dance, ornamentation, and regional systems in comparative and historical perspective.

CAROLINE HUMPHREY is Professor of Asian Anthropology and a Fellow of King’s College at the University of Cambridge. She began her work in the Soviet Union in 1966 and has continued to conduct research throughout the post-socialist transition in Russia, and Outer and Inner Mongolia. In addition, she has conducted fieldwork in India and Nepal. Her research interests span political and economic processes as well as religion and ritual. Books include Karl Marx Collective (1983), Shamans and Elders (1996), and Marx Went Away but Karl Stayed Behind (1998). Co-authored works include: with S. Hugh-Jones, Barter, Exchange and Value (1992), with J. Laidlaw, The Archetypal Actions of Ritual (1994); with N. Thomas, Shamanism, History and the State (1994); and with D. Sneath, The End of Nomadism? Society, State and the Environment in Inner Asia (1999).

ANDRÉ ITEANU is Directeur de Recherches at the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique in Paris. He has conducted extensive research in Papua New Guinea and has recently completed an award-winning film, Letter to the Dead. Publications include: La Ronde des Échanges (1983), Of Relations with the Dead (with C. Barraud, de Coppet, and R. Jamous, 1994), Cosmos and Society in Oceania (with de Coppet, 1995), and Parle et je t’écouterai (with E. Schwimmer, 1996). His current research interests focus on the integration of the West in cosmologies of Papua New Guinea.
MICHAEL LAMBEK is Professor of Anthropology at the University of Toronto. His most recent publications are A Reader in the Anthropology of Religion (2002) and The Weight of the Past: Living with History in Mahajaga, Madagascar (2002). Co-authored books include Tense Past: Cultural Essays in Trauma and Memory (with P. Antze, 1996), and Bodies and Persons: Comparative Perspectives from Africa and Melanesia (with A. Strathern, 1998). He is currently interested in irony and an anthropology of ethical practice.

Preface and Acknowledgments

While this volume has been in preparation, we have discovered that if you scratch an anthropologist, you are likely to find a paper on names clambering for attention. In the autumn of 1999, ten anthropologists met for two days at Pembroke College, Cambridge, to talk about names and naming. Our institutional affiliations were international and our fieldwork experience spanned many regions across the globe. We asked what a focus on names and naming might bring to current anthropological thinking and we asked how recent developments in anthropology and beyond might shed new light on our understanding of names and naming more generally.

It was an exhilarating experience, as has been the genesis of this book. Seven of the original workshop participants have contributed chapters here. Maurice Bloch was unable to attend, but provided a chapter. Nadia Abu El-Haj and Eduardo Viveiros de Castro felt their individual papers were too close to their own about-to-be-published books to warrant inclusion, although happily Viveiros de Castro was able to provide commentary on Hugh-Jones’s paper; Thomas Hansen and Linda Layne contributed chapters.

We have been fascinated, delighted, moved, amused, and not a little awed by the sheer amount of detail waiting for the interested researcher. Suddenly, virtually everything — newspaper articles, websites, asides in historical texts, and academic publications — seems to point in some way to the importance people around the world attach to names. However, we found nothing in the field of recent anthropological analysis that brings together the intrigue of comparative ethnographic detail and an overarching theoretical examination of the processes themselves. That is our aim here.

Our thanks are both institutional and personal. Without support from the British Academy, the Department of Social Anthropology, and Pembroke College, Cambridge, we would never have succeeded in bringing the workshop into being. Thoughtful comments from Martin Holbraad,
Preface and Acknowledgments

Benjamín Macías, Emile Perreau-Saussine, Barbara Rosenthal-Schutt, and Harold Schickler enriched the scope of our introductory arguments. Those from Andrew Beck, Cambridge University Press religious studies editor, and from two anonymous reviewers helped to strengthen the book overall. It goes without saying that the physical production of a manuscript is inevitably beset by technical crises at the worst possible moment. It should not go without saying that Barry Haylock and Chick Hatch were instrumental in ensuring these crises were not fatal.

We are sad to report that Susan Benson, one of our contributors, passed away in the summer of 2005. Although she will be much missed by family, friends, and colleagues, we are happy that her voice will continue to carry weight in the present collection.

Note