Aristotle and the Rediscovery of Citizenship

Aristotle and the Rediscovery of Citizenship confronts a question that is central to Aristotle’s political philosophy as well as to contemporary political theory: What is a citizen? Answers prove to be elusive, in part because late-twentieth-century critiques of the Enlightenment called into doubt fundamental tenets that once guided us. Engaging the two major works of Aristotle’s political philosophy, his Nicomachean Ethics and his Politics, Professor Susan D. Collins poses questions that current discussions of liberal citizenship do not adequately address. Drawing a path from contemporary disputes to Aristotle, she examines in detail his complex presentations of moral virtue, civic education, and law; his view of the aims and limits of the political community; and his treatment of the connection between citizenship and the human good. Collins thereby shows how Aristotle continues to be an indispensable source of enlightenment, as he has been for political and religious traditions of the past.

Susan D. Collins is assistant professor of political science at the University of Houston. Her research focuses on political thought in classical antiquity. She has contributed to the American Journal of Political Science and the Review of Politics, and she is coeditor of Action and Contemplation: Studies in the Moral and Political Thought of Aristotle and cotranslator of Empire and the Ends of Politics: Plato’s “Menexenus” and Pericles’ Funeral Oration.
Aristotle and the Rediscovery of Citizenship

SUSAN D. COLLINS
University of Houston
In memory of my parents

Elizabeth and Thomas Collins
Contents

Acknowledgments \hspace{1cm} page ix

1 Liberal Citizenship and Aristotle’s Ethics \hspace{1cm} 1
   Liberalism and Its Critics \hspace{1cm} 6
   The Limits of Liberal Citizenship \hspace{1cm} 7
   Aristotle on Law, Education, and Moral Virtue \hspace{1cm} 19

2 Citizen Virtue and the Longing for the Noble \hspace{1cm} 47
   Courage as Noble Sacrifice and Self-Concern \hspace{1cm} 52
   Noble Deeds and the Ascent of Virtue \hspace{1cm} 58
   Magnanimity and Virtue as the Highest Good \hspace{1cm} 61

3 Justice as a Virtue \hspace{1cm} 67
   Justice as the Lawful \hspace{1cm} 69
   Justice as Fairness \hspace{1cm} 71
   Reciprocity and the Regime \hspace{1cm} 74
   Justice and the Dual Ends of Moral Virtue \hspace{1cm} 76
   Law and Right Reason \hspace{1cm} 80

4 Prudence, the Good Citizen, and the Good Life \hspace{1cm} 91
   The Problem of Prudence \hspace{1cm} 91
   Education, Law, and Compulsion \hspace{1cm} 98
   The Political Community as Natural End \hspace{1cm} 102
   Recasting the Question of the Good Life \hspace{1cm} 108

5 Citizenship and the Limits of Law \hspace{1cm} 119
   The Identity of the Citizen \hspace{1cm} 119
   Citizenship, Revolution, and the Regime \hspace{1cm} 122
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>viii</th>
<th>Contents</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The Good Citizen and the Good Man</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Citizenship and the Rule of Law</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>Political Wit and Enlightenment</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Nobility and Irony</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Politics and Wit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Education, Liberty, and Leisure</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Conclusion: Aristotle and the Rediscovery of Citizenship</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bibliography</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Index</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Acknowledgments

In the course of my education, I have had the support of teachers, colleagues, friends, and family. I dedicate the book to the memory of my parents, Elizabeth and Thomas Collins, whose love and care for their children seemed infinite and who were models of decency and humanity. I am especially grateful to two teachers, Leon Craig and Christopher Bruell; their example and thought continue to inspire me, and I will always remain in their debt. My gratitude also to the faculty at Boston College, Robert Faulkner, Susan Shell, and the late Ernest Fortin, who enriched my studies. Four friends in particular, Monty Brown, Lorna Dawson, Robert Bartlett, and Devin Stauffer, have made my life and thought better in every way, and I am very grateful to Lorna and Bob for their tireless comments on the manuscript in its various phases. In writing the book, I have also benefited from the advice of several colleagues and friends. Paul Rahe and Harvey Mansfield assisted at critical points in the publication process and provided extensive comments on the manuscript. Stephen Salkever, Arlene Saxonhouse, and Mary Nichols were incisive readers whose suggestions greatly improved the work. Others have given their support along the way, including David Bolotin, Matthew Davis, Charles Griswold, John Scott, Lorraine Pangle, Thomas Pangle, Ty Tessitore, Sandy Thatcher, and Catherine Zuckert, and I have had the good fortune of wonderful colleagues at the University of Houston, in particular, Ted Estess, Cynthia Freeland, Ross Lence, Donald Lutz, Rick Matland, Susan Scarrow, and Robert Zaretsky, whose fellowship always managed to lift my spirits. My graduate assistants, Sarah Neal and Carol Brown, cheerfully and expertly took on every task, however tedious, and made my work so much easier. My warm thanks to the editors at Cambridge, Lewis Bateman and Beatrice Rehl, who supported the manuscript from the beginning; to Louise Calabro, who guided it through the production process; and to Helen Greenberg, whose careful copyediting helped to polish it.

Finally, I want to express my deep gratitude to my husband, Joseph, and daughter, Isabella. I cannot imagine my life without them; their existence alone makes it worth living.

Parts of Chapters 2, 3, and 4 appeared in an earlier form in “Moral Virtue and the Limits of the Political Community in Aristotle’s Nicomachean Ethics” in the American Journal of Political Science 48 (January 2004). I am grateful to the John M. Olin Foundation for supporting a critical year’s leave to work on the manuscript and to the Earhart Foundation for their generous summer support, which helped me to complete the publication process.
Aristotle and the Rediscovery of Citizenship