

Contents

Preface	page ix
1 Styles and ideas	1
1.1 Aims and context	1
1.2 A musicological context	6
1.3 Elgar the progressive	10
2 A Heideggerian refinement of Schenker's theory	27
2.1 Analytical preliminaries	27
2.2 Temporality and the Augenblick	32
2.3 Mimesis and disclosure	39
2.4 Heideggerian intentionality and musical phenomenology	47
2.5 The musical Augenblick	59
3 Immuring and immured tonalities: tonal malaise in the First Symphony, Op. 55	65
3.1 Hepokoski's analysis and a Hepokoskian analysis	65
3.2 A Heideggerian–Schenkerian analysis	86
4 'Fracted and corroborate': narrative implications of form and tonality in Falstaff , Op. 68	107
4.1 The nature, subject, and intent of a symphonic study	107
4.2 Preliminary analytical questions	118
4.3 An overview of the form: deformation and rotation	120
4.4 Associative tonality and the unpicking of identity	138
5 Hermeneutics and mimesis	154
5.1 Heidegger, Schenker, music, and modern musicology	154
5.2 The mimetic function of sonata form: fairy-stories, the quest narrative, and humankind's historical and temporal existence	171
6 The annihilation of hope and the unpicking of identity: Elgarian hermeneutics	184
6.1 'A nice sub-acid feeling': the First Symphony	184
6.2 Elgar's invention of the human: 'Falstaff ([micro-]tragedy)'	199

Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-86200-4 - Edward Elgar, Modernist
J. P. E. Harper-Scott
Table of Contents
More information

viii

Contents

7	Modern music, modern man	220
	Glossary	231
	Bibliography	239
	Index	247