The AEF Way of War

This book provides the most comprehensive examination of American Expeditionary Forces (AEF) combat doctrine and methods ever published. It shows how AEF combat units actually fought on the Western Front in World War I. It describes how four AEF divisions (the 1st, 2nd, 26th, and 77th) planned and conducted their battles and how they adapted their doctrine, tactics, and other operational methods during the war. General John Pershing and other AEF leaders promulgated an inadequate prewar doctrine, with only minor modification, as the official doctrine of the AEF. Many early American attacks suffered from these unrealistic ideas that retained too much faith in the infantry rifleman on the modern battlefield. However, many AEF divisions adjusted their doctrine and operational methods as they fought, preparing more comprehensive attack plans, employing flexible infantry formations, and maximizing firepower to seize limited objectives.

The AEF Way of War

The American Army and Combat in World War I

MARK ETHAN GROTELUESCHEN

United States Air Force Academy
For Abigail, Grant, Caleb, and Samuel.

And in memory of the military service of their grandfathers

Paul Gerhardt Grotelueschen

Albert Millson Gonder
USMC, 1951–1954
Contents

Acknowledgments ix

Introduction 1

1 Doctrine, Dogma, and Development in the AEF 10
2 The 1st Division: Training for and Waging Trench Warfare 59
3 The 1st Division: The Search for a “Sufficiently Powerful Fire” 106
4 The 26th “Yankee” Division: Doctrine, Discipline, and Discrimination 142
5 The 26th “Yankee” Division: Doctrine, Demoralization, and Disintegration 176
6 The 2nd Division: Bloody Lessons in “Open Warfare” 200
7 The 2nd Division: The Rise of Set-Piece Battle 238
8 The 77th “Liberty” Division: Training for the Trenches and Fighting on the Vesle 280
9 The 77th “Liberty” Division: Dogma, Delegation, and Discretion 310
10 Conclusions 343

References 365

Index 379
Acknowledgments

I am grateful for the advice and assistance of dozens of professors, historians, archivists, librarians, friends, and family members. Without their support, this book would have been impossible to complete. Professors Brian M. Linn, Joseph G. Dawson III, H. W. Brands, Arnold P. Krammer, R. J. Q. Adams, and Richard Stadelmann all read (and, in some cases, reread) the manuscript and provided helpful comments. I thank them for all their assistance and also for the encouragement they provided throughout the project.

I also thank scholars Mike Neiberg, Tim Travers, Holger H. Herwig, Dennis Showalter, and Edgar F. Raines, Jr., for advice and encouragement along the way. Professor Robert Ferrell took time away from his own research into the Meuse-Argonne campaign to discuss the AEF with me and loaned me his copy of P. L. Stackpole’s diary. Major James Powell, U.S. Army, and David Campbell both provided important information.

Throughout this project, I have been blessed with the able help of a number of archivists, librarians, and research assistants. During my work at the National Archives and Records Administration, Mitchel Yockelson and Timothy Nenninger provided extraordinary research assistance, using not only their skills as archivists but also as Great War historians themselves. Also, Tim Nenninger allowed me access to important chapters of Charles P. Summerall’s memoir. The staff at the U.S. Army Military History Institute, especially Dick Sommers, Richard Baker, Kathy Olson, and David Keough, helped make my visit there as productive and enjoyable as possible. Dr. Sommers’ personal interest in my project ensured that I had access to important materials I did not know existed, and Ms. Olson went above and beyond the call of duty in assisting me both during and after my visit. At the Combined Arms Research Library at Fort Leavenworth, Rusty Rafferty and John Roger provided important assistance while I was on site and loaned me materials before and after my visit. Although I was unable to travel to the Donovan Research Library at Fort Benning, Ericka Loze sent me material unavailable anywhere else. Jane Yates, the director of the Citadel Archives and Museum, helped me make the most of my visit there. James W. Zobel did the same at the MacArthur Memorial and Archives, as did Andrew Woods at the McCormick Research Center of the First Division Museum. Finally, I thank the entire staff of both the Massachusetts Historical Society and the manuscripts division of the Library of Congress.
Acknowledgments

The research required for this project entailed a few lengthy trips, and a number of families graciously opened their homes to me during my travels. Thanks for all the logistical and moral support given by Corvin and Nadine Connolly, Paul and Sherri Grotelueschen, Mark and Liz Heinitz, Herb and Ruth Hohenstein, Tom and Beth Hohenstein, Jim and Tisha Powell, and John and Cindy Raquet. In some instances, their support made a trip possible; in every case, they made my travels more enjoyable.

Finally, thanks to my family for all their prayers, advice, and encouragement, and especially to Alison, my wife, whose love, support, and countless daily acts of service enabled this project to be completed. Despite all the remarkable assistance I have received throughout this undertaking, all errors of fact, faulty interpretations, and mistaken conclusions are my own.

Soli Deo Gloria