How did Victorians, as creators and viewers of images, visualize the politics of franchise reform? This study of Victorian art and parliamentary politics, specifically in the 1840s and 1860s, answers that question by viewing the First and Second Reform Acts from the perspectives offered by Ruskin's political theories of art and Bagehot's visual theory of politics. Combining subjects and approaches characteristic of art history, political history, literary criticism, and cultural critique, Picturing Reform in Victorian Britain treats both paintings and wood engravings, particularly those published in Punch and the Illustrated London News. Carlisle analyzes unlikely pairings – a novel by Trollope and a painting by Hayter, an engraving after Leech and a high-society portrait by Landseer – to argue that such conjunctions marked both everyday life in Victorian Britain and the nature of its visual politics as it was manifested in the myriad heterogeneous and often incongruous images of illustrated journalism.

Janice Carlisle is Professor of English at Yale University, and she has published a wide variety of essays and books on Victorian novels and autobiographies, including a study of the works of John Stuart Mill. More recently she has focused on the culture of Britain in the 1860s, publishing a book on the sensory registers of novels written during that decade (Common Scents: Comparative Encounters in High-Victorian Fiction, 2004).
Nineteenth-century British literature and culture have been rich fields for interdisciplinary studies. Since the turn of the twentieth century, scholars and critics have tracked the intersections and tensions between Victorian literature and the visual arts, politics, social organization, economic life, technical innovations, scientific thought – in short, culture in its broadest sense. In recent years, theoretical challenges and historiographical shifts have unsettled the assumptions of previous scholarly synthesis and called into question the terms of older debates. Whereas the tendency in much past literary critical interpretation was to use the metaphor of culture as ‘background’, feminist, Foucauldian, and other analyses have employed more dynamic models that raise questions of power and of circulation. Such developments have reanimated the field. This series aims to accommodate and promote the most interesting work being undertaken on the frontiers of the field of nineteenth-century literary studies: work which intersects fruitfully with other fields of study such as history, or literary theory, or the history of science. Comparative as well as interdisciplinary approaches are welcomed.

A complete list of titles published will be found at the end of the book.
Cambridge University Press
978-0-521-86836-5 - Picturing Reform in Victorian Britain
Janice Carlisle
Frontmatter
More information
For Kate
Contents

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>List of illustrations</th>
<th>page viii</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Acknowledgments</td>
<td>xi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1 Art as politics: lines in theory and practice</td>
<td>27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2 Pictures on display</td>
<td>61</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Redrawing the franchise in the 1860s: lines around</td>
<td>117</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>the constitution</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Contexts of place and placement</td>
<td>122</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Punch and his Working-Man</td>
<td>134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The ILN and the strength of numbers</td>
<td>152</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4 Within the pale</td>
<td>184</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conclusion</td>
<td>213</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Notes</td>
<td>220</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bibliography</td>
<td>249</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Index</td>
<td>266</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Illustrations

List of illustrations

List of illustrations

3.11 “Members of the South Middlesex Rifle Volunteer Corps at Work by Torchlight in the Gardens of Burlington House, Piccadilly, Clearing the Ground for a Drill-Shed,” wood engraving, ILN (January 18, 1862: 77). Yale Center for British Art, Paul Mellon Collection. 169

3.12 “The Volunteer Review in Hyde Park on Saturday Last,” wood engraving, ILN (June 30, 1866: 644). Yale Center for British Art, Paul Mellon Collection. 177

4.3 “D’Israel-i in Triumph; Or, the Modern Sphynx,” wood engraving after John Tenniel, Punch (June 15, 1867: 246–47). Yale Center for British Art, Paul Mellon Collection. 196

4.4 Edward Poynter, Israel in Egypt, oil on canvas (1867). By permission of the Guildhall Art Gallery, City of London. 198

4.5 “A Sketch Taken in Park Lane, May 6, 1867,” wood engraving after Ernest Griset, Punch (May 18, 1867: 201). Yale Center for British Art, Paul Mellon Collection. 201

4.7 “Check to King Mob,” wood engraving after John Tenniel, Punch (November 30, 1867: 221). Yale Center for British Art, Paul Mellon Collection. 205
In the course of my work on this project, I have become indebted to many individuals and institutions. First among the latter is the Yale Center for British Art because it is an institution so rich in the expertise of its curators as well as in its holdings. I am grateful for the assistance of Kraig Binkowski in the Reference Library, Elisabeth Fairman in the Department of Rare Books, and Gillian Forrester in the Department of Prints and Drawings. In addition, I want to thank Adrianna Bates for being such a knowledgeable and welcoming presence in the study room of the Center. Other libraries and librarians at Yale have been important to my research, including the Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Collection and the Lillian Goldman Law Library.

At Sterling Memorial Library, Barbara Rockenbach, Roberta Pillette, and Alan Solomon were particularly helpful. Emily Coit and Kwabena Antwi-Boasiako provided bibliographical support. Katherine Haskins shared with me her extensive knowledge of Victorian wood engraving; and Janet Henrich, master of Trumbull College, made it a wonderful place to live and work.

I have also been fortunate to have had access to the resources of the Howard Tilton Library at Tulane University; the National Library of Art, as well as Prints and Drawings, at the Victoria and Albert Museum; the British Library; the Caird Library, National Maritime Museum; and the Huntington Library.

To the editors with whom I have worked, I owe a great deal of thanks. I am indebted to Wendy Toole, the copy-editor, and to Emma Wildsmith and Jodie Hodgson, project manager and production editor, respectively. Gillian Beer, the series editor at Cambridge University Press, had faith in the initial version of this book, and she continued to offer her cheering support throughout the process of its revision. Finally, I hope that Linda Bree understands how deeply grateful I am for her consistent kindness, understanding, and patience.

Tim Barringer's generosity as a colleague is, in my experience, unequalled. He read the entire manuscript twice, once as I was just feeling my way toward research in a field not my own and again when the manuscript had reached its penultimate form. His perspectives on the history of British art and his faith in this book were invaluable, though he cannot be held responsible for any of its remaining shortcomings.
Acknowledgments

My family has given me, as it always has, support far beyond what anyone deserves. Joseph Roach, my partner, has encouraged the completion of this book for longer than I would like to admit; and to him I will continue to be grateful for his unfailingly astute advice. My son, Joseph Roach, provided long-distance encouragement and, more specifically, late-night consultations during computer crises. My daughter, Catherine Roach, and my son-in-law, Josh Chafetz, are models of scholarly achievement; and Josh shared with me his expertise in British constitutional history. To Catherine – Kate – I owe both professional and personal debts. As an art historian, she has welcomed me into her field and shared her knowledge and enthusiasm about Victorian art, making visits to galleries and special exhibitions occasions of both learning and delight. She read two versions of this book from beginning to end and parts of it more than twice. With love and appreciation, I dedicate this book to Kate.