The Transatlantic Century

This is a fascinating new overview of European-American relations during the long twentieth century. Ranging from economics, culture, and consumption to war, politics, and diplomacy, Mary Nolan charts the rise of American influence in Eastern and Western Europe, its mid-twentieth-century triumph and its gradual erosion since the 1970s. She reconstructs the circuits of exchange along which ideas, commodities, economic models, cultural products, and people moved across the Atlantic, capturing the differing versions of modernity that emerged on both sides of the Atlantic, and examining how these alternately produced cooperation, conflict, and ambivalence toward the other. Attributing the rise and demise of American influence in Europe not only to economics but equally to wars, the book locates the roots of many transatlantic disagreements in very different experiences and memories of war. This is an unprecedented account of the American Century in Europe that recovers its full richness and complexity.

MARY NOLAN is Professor of History at New York University. She is the author of Visions of Modernity: American Business and the Modernization of Germany (1994) and co-editor of Crimes of War: Guilt and Denial in the Twentieth Century (2002).
New Approaches to European History

Series editors
William Beik Emory University
T. C. W. Blanning Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge
Brendan Simms Peterhouse, Cambridge

New Approaches to European History is an important textbook series, which provides concise but authoritative surveys of major themes and problems in European history since the Renaissance. Written at a level and length accessible to advanced school students and undergraduates, each book in the series addresses topics or themes that students of European history encounter daily: the series embraces both some of the more “traditional” subjects of study and those cultural and social issues to which increasing numbers of school and college courses are devoted. A particular effort is made to consider the wider international implications of the subject under scrutiny.

To aid the student reader, scholarly apparatus and annotation is light, but each work has full supplementary bibliographies and notes for further reading: where appropriate, chronologies, maps, diagrams, and other illustrative material are also provided.

For a complete list of titles published in the series, please see:
www.cambridge.org/newapproaches
The Transatlantic Century
Europe and America,
1890–2010

Mary Nolan
Contents

List of illustrations ........................................ vi
List of maps .................................................. viii
List of tables ................................................. ix
Acknowledgments ........................................... x

Introduction .................................................... 1

1 An uncertain balance, 1890–1914 .......................... 10

2 World War I: European crisis and American opportunity ........................................... 52

3 Ambivalent engagement ..................................... 76

4 The depression and transatlantic new deals ............ 104

5 Strange affinities, new enemies .............................. 131

6 From world war to Cold War ............................... 154

7 Cooperation, competition, containment .................. 191

8 Culture wars .................................................... 230

9 The American Century erodes, 1968–1979 ............. 267

10 Renewed conflict and surprising collapse .............. 304

11 A widening Atlantic ......................................... 331

12 Imperial America, estranged Europe .................... 356

Suggested readings ........................................... 374

Index ................................................................ 385
Illustrations

1 The Rhodes Colossus: striding from Cape Town to Cairo. Punch. December 10, 1892.
5 The first American gold for Germany, December 23, 1924. BArch, Bild 102-00924/George Pahl.
7 Breadline at McCauley Water Street Mission under the Brooklyn Bridge, New York, early 1930s. Library of Congress.
10 Magnitogorsk. IISH, International Institute of Social History (Amsterdam).
12 Harry Dexter White (left) and John Maynard Keynes, 1946. IMF, public domain.
14 Marshall Plan “America helps with Europe’s reconstruction.” BArch, Bild 183-R83460.
List of illustrations

15 Berlin Wall and Brandenburg Gate. BArch, B 145 Bild-P061246. 216
19 Congress Hall Berlin, 1957. BArch, N 1648 Bild-KF11408/Manfred Beier. 254
21 Burning Russian tank in front of the building of Radio Prague, August 1968. (Vrije Volk), International Institute of Social History (Amsterdam). 274
22 Oil crisis, November 1973, horses replace cars in the Netherlands. akg-images/RIA Novosti. 285
23 Strike by Polish Solidarity at the Gdansk shipyard, 1980. akg-images/RIA Novosti. 312
24 President Reagan and Soviet General Secretary Gorbachev at the Reykjavik summit. Courtesy Ronald Reagan Library. 318
Maps

3 European integration. After map in Cambridge History of the Cold War, vol. II: Crises and Détente (Cambridge University Press, 2010), 196.
Tables

1.1 Percentage world trade and population, 1914
1.2 GDP per capita at 1970 United States prices
1.3 Distribution of world’s industrial production in %
1.4 1913 world trade
Acknowledgments

For the last twenty-five years I have been reading, thinking, and writing about transatlantic relations of all sorts, but this work relies on much more than my own research. The writing of history is always a collective project, and a synthetic work like this one relies particularly heavily on the recent scholarship of experts in European, American, and transnational history.

I am particularly fortunate to have had Michael Watson as my editor. He read and critiqued each chapter and was enormously patient with the delays in completing the project. Two friends and colleagues, Tom Bender and Marilyn Young, read and critiqued every chapter, sometimes more than once. They offered invaluable advice, saved me from many mistakes, and offered consistent encouragement when I doubted the book would ever be finished. I cannot thank them enough. I am grateful to Fred Block and Sasha Disko for reading early chapters of the manuscript and to Michael David-Fox for getting me up to speed on recent Soviet historiography. I appreciate helpful comments received when presenting parts of this project at the Atlantic History seminar at New York University, at the Northeast Working Group on German Women’s History and Culture, and at the Davis Center in Princeton.

Writing requires time away from teaching and two institutions provided that. A fellowship from the Remarque Institute at New York University provided a semester’s leave at the early stages of the project. The Shelby Collum Davis Center for Historical Studies at Princeton gave me a most productive and enjoyable year with access to Firestone Library and stimulating colleagues when the book was well underway. My thanks to Dan Rodgers, the director of the Davis Center, for his support for my work and for transnational history more generally.

Without help from my graduate student Laura Honsberger, this book would not have the images that enrich it. I am deeply grateful for her tireless work in tracking down both pictures and permissions.

A final thanks is owed to my friends and fellow peace activists in Brooklyn For Peace with whom I have worked for the past twenty-five years. They have constantly reminded me of the real-world stakes in understanding transatlantic relations and of the importance of combining scholarship with activism.

This book is dedicated to my students, past and present. My graduate students have been a constant source of intellectual stimulation and a joy to teach. Both they and the undergraduates in my Cold War course provided welcome feedback as I developed my arguments for various parts of The Transatlantic Century.