Contents

_Acknowledgments_

_Illustrations_

1  Introduction: finding the elusive but identifiable Blackness within the culture out of which Toni Morrison writes

2  Dahomey’s Vodun and Kongo’s Yowa: the survival of West and Central African traditional cosmologies in African America

3  Bandoki: witches, ambivalent power, and the fusion of good and evil

4  Kanda: living elders, the ancestral presence, and the ancestor as foundation

5  Banganga: the specialists – medicine (wo)men and priest(esse)s

6  Identifiable Blackness: Toni Morrison’s literary canon at the Western crossroads

_Notes_

_Works cited_

_Index_