The Cambridge Introduction to Narrative

What is narrative? How does it work and how does it shape our lives and the texts we read? H. Porter Abbott emphasizes that narrative is found not just in literature, film, and theater, but everywhere in the ordinary course of people’s lives. This widely used introduction, now thoroughly revised, is informed throughout by recent developments in the field and includes two new chapters. With its lucid exposition of concepts and suggestions for further reading, this book is not only an excellent introduction for courses focused on narrative but also an invaluable resource for students and scholars across a wide range of fields, including literature and drama, film and media, society and politics, journalism, autobiography, history, and still others throughout the arts, humanities, and social sciences.

H. PORTER ABBOTT is Professor Emeritus in the Department of English at the University of California, Santa Barbara. He is the author of The Fiction of Samuel Beckett: Form and Effect, Diary Fiction: Writing as Action, Beckett Writing Beckett: the Author in the Autograph, and editor of On the Origin of Fictions: Interdisciplinary Perspectives, a special issue of the journal SubStance.
Cambridge Introductions to Literature

This series is designed to introduce students to key topics and authors. Accessible and lively, these introductions will also appeal to readers who want to broaden their understanding of the books and authors they enjoy.

- Ideal for students, teachers, and lecturers
- Concise, yet packed with essential information
- Key suggestions for further reading

Titles in this series

H. Porter Abbott  The Cambridge Introduction to Narrative (second edition)
Eric Bulson  The Cambridge Introduction to James Joyce
Warren Chernaik  The Cambridge Introduction to Shakespeare’s History Plays
John Xiros Cooper  The Cambridge Introduction to T. S. Eliot
Patrick Corcoran  The Cambridge Introduction to Francophone Literature
Gregg Crane  The Cambridge Introduction to the Nineteenth-Century American Novel
Kirk Curnutt  The Cambridge Introduction to F. Scott Fitzgerald
Janette Dillon  The Cambridge Introduction to Early English Theatre
Janette Dillon  The Cambridge Introduction to Shakespeare’s Tragedies
Penny Gay  The Cambridge Introduction to Shakespeare’s Comedies
Jane Goldman  The Cambridge Introduction to Virginia Woolf
Kevin J. Hayes  The Cambridge Introduction to Herman Melville
Nancy Henry  The Cambridge Introduction to George Eliot
Leslie Hill  The Cambridge Introduction to Jacques Derrida
David Holdeman  The Cambridge Introduction to W. B. Yeats
Adrian Hunter  The Cambridge Introduction to the Short Story in English
C. L. Innes  The Cambridge Introduction to Postcolonial Literatures
M. Jimmie Killingsworth  The Cambridge Introduction to Walt Whitman
Pericles Lewis  The Cambridge Introduction to Modernism
Ronan McDonald  The Cambridge Introduction to Samuel Beckett
Wendy Martin  The Cambridge Introduction to Emily Dickinson
Peter Meson  The Cambridge Introduction to Mark Twain
David Morley  The Cambridge Introduction to Creative Writing
Ira Nadel  The Cambridge Introduction to Ezra Pound
Leland S. Person  The Cambridge Introduction to Nathaniel Hawthorne
John Peters  The Cambridge Introduction to Joseph Conrad
Justin Quinn  The Cambridge Introduction to Modern Irish Poetry
Sarah Robbins  The Cambridge Introduction to Harriet Beecher Stowe
Martin Scofield  The Cambridge Introduction to the American Short Story
Emma Smith  The Cambridge Introduction to Shakespeare
Peter Thomson  The Cambridge Introduction to English Theatre, 1660–1900
Janet Todd  The Cambridge Introduction to Jane Austen
Theresa M. Towner  The Cambridge Introduction to William Faulkner
Jennifer Wallace  The Cambridge Introduction to Tragedy
The Cambridge Introduction to Narrative

Second edition

H. PORTER ABBOTT
For Anita (es tevi milu)
Contents

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>List of illustrations</th>
<th>page</th>
<th>xi</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Preface</td>
<td>xii</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Preface to the second edition</td>
<td>xv</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acknowledgments</td>
<td>xvii</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Chapter 1 Narrative and life

- The universality of narrative 1
- Narrative and time 3
- Narrative perception 6

Chapter 2 Defining narrative

- The bare minimum 13
- Story and narrative discourse 16
- The mediation (construction) of story 20
- Constituent and supplementary events 22
- Narrativity 24

Chapter 3 The borders of narrative

- Framing narratives 28
- Paratexts 30
- The outer limits of narrative 31
- Hypertext narrative 32
- Is it narrative or is it life itself? 35

Chapter 4 The rhetoric of narrative

- The rhetoric of narrative 40
- Causation 41
Contents

Normalization 44
Masterplots 46
Narrative rhetoric at work 49

Chapter 5 Closure 55
Conflict: the agon 55
Closure and endings 56
Closure, suspense, and surprise 57
Closure at the level of expectations 58
Closure at the level of questions 60
The absence of closure 62

Chapter 6 Narration 67
A few words on interpretation 67
The narrator 68
Does the narrator narrate everything? 69
Voice 70
Focalization 73
Distance 74
Reliability 75
Free indirect style 77
Narration on stage and screen 79

Chapter 7 Interpreting narrative 83
The implied author 84
Underreading 86
Overreading 89
Gaps 90
Cruxes 92
Repetition: themes and motifs 95

Chapter 8 Three ways to interpret narrative 100
The question of wholeness in narrative 100
Intentional readings 102
Symptomatic readings 104
Adaptive readings 106
Chapter 9 Adaptation across media

Adaptation as creative destruction
Duration and pace
Character
Figurative language
Gaps
Focalization
Constraints of the marketplace

Chapter 10 Character and self in narrative

Character vs. action
Flat and round characters
Can characters be real?
Types
Autobiography
Life writing as performative

Chapter 11 Narrative and truth

Fiction and nonfiction
How do we know if it’s fiction or nonfiction?
Historical fact in fiction
The truth of fiction

Chapter 12 Narrative worlds

Narrative space
The mind of the storyworld
Multiple worlds: forking-path narratives
Multiple worlds: narrative metalepsis

Chapter 13 Narrative contestation

A contest of narratives
A narrative lattice-work
Shadow stories
Motivation and personality
Masterplots and types
Contents

Revising cultural masterplots 187
Battling narratives are everywhere 189

Chapter 14 Narrative negotiation 193

Narrative negotiation 194
Critical reading as narrative negotiation 199
Closure, one more time 205
The end of closure? 209

Notes 214
Bibliography 223
Glossary and topical index 228
Index of authors and narratives 244
Illustrations

The author and publisher are grateful to be able to include the following illustrations.

2 Black and white photograph of Belshazzar’s Feast by Rembrandt (c. 1635). Copyright © National Gallery, London. Used by permission. 7

3 La douce résistance by Michel Garnier, 1793. Private collection. Every effort was made to contact the owner, but without success. 8

4 Black and white photograph of Dr. Syn by Andrew Wyeth (1981), tempera on panel. Copyright © Andrew Wyeth. Collection of Andrew and Betsy Wyeth. 9

6 Black and white photographic still from Wuthering Heights (United Artists, 1939). Courtesy of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. 117

7 Black and white photographic still from Cleopatra (Twentyfirst Century Fox, 1963). Courtesy of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. 120

9 Black and white photographic still from Duck Amuck (Warner Brothers, 1953). Courtesy of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. 172
Preface

The purpose of this book is to help readers understand what narrative is, how it is constructed, how it acts upon us, how we act upon it, how it is transmitted, how it changes when the medium or the cultural context changes, and how it is found not just in the arts but everywhere in the ordinary course of people’s lives, many times a day. This last point is especially important. We are all narrators, though we may rarely be aware of it. A statement as simple as “I took the car to work” qualifies as narrative. As we seek to communicate more detail about events in time, we become involved in increasingly complex acts of narration. We are also the constant recipients of narrative: from newspapers and television, from books and films, and from friends and relatives telling us, among other things, that they took the car to work. Therefore, though much of this book is devoted to narrative in literature, film, and drama, it grounds its treatment of narrative by introducing it as a human phenomenon that is not restricted to literature, film, and theater, but is found in all activities that involve the representation of events in time. In its early chapters, the book moves back and forth between the arts and the everyday. At the same time, the book honors the fact that out of this common capability have come rich and meaningful narratives that we come back to and reflect on repeatedly in our lives.

This book is descriptive rather than prescriptive; it seeks to describe what happens when we encounter narrative, rather than to prescribe what should happen. All along the way questions arise that are very much alive in current work on narrative. These are often tough issues, and, with a few important exceptions (as for example the definition of narrative that I employ), I try to keep these issues open. In organization, the book introduces the subject of narrative by moving outward from simplicity to complexity, from the component parts of narrative in Chapters Two and Three to its numerous effects, including its extraordinary rhetorical power and the importance of the concept of “closure,” in Chapters Four and Five. Chapter Six deals with narration and the key role of the narrator.
Chapters Seven and Eight, in taking up issues connected with the interpretation of narrative, shift the focus from the power of narrative to the power of readers and audiences. In this sense, narrative is always a two-way street. Without our collaboration, there is no narrative to begin with. And if it is true that we allow ourselves to be manipulated by narrative, it is also true that we do manipulating of our own. These chapters take up this interplay of audiences and narratives in the process of interpretation and culminate in Chapter Eight’s treatment of three fundamentally different ways of reading that we all engage in: intentional, symptomatic, and adaptive. The differences between them are important and bring in their wake different understandings of what we mean by meaning in narrative.

Chapter Nine turns to the differences that different media make in narrative and to what happens when you move a story from one medium to narrate it in another. Chapter Ten opens out the subject of character, both as a function of narrative and as intimately connected with what we loosely call “the self” in autobiography. In the final two chapters, we return to the broad subject of narrative’s role in culture and society. Much of politics and the law is a contest of narratives. Chapter Thirteen looks at the ways in which these conflicts of narrative play out, particularly in the law. And in Chapter Fourteen, I look at the ways in which narrative can also be an instrument by which storytellers and readers seek to negotiate the claims of competing and often intractable conflicts. Stories, for example, that are told over and over again (cultural masterplots) are often efforts to settle conflicts which are deeply embedded in a culture.

In this book, I have endeavored to avoid writing another anatomy of narrative, of which there are fine examples available in print (Genette, 1980; Prince, 1987). Instead, I have sought at all times to restrict focus to the most useful concepts and terminology. The field of narratology has produced a great arsenal of distinctions and terms. I have kept my selection of these to a minimum, using only those that are indispensable. These key terms will be found throughout the book and are featured in boldface in the Glossary. As such, this is a foundational book. The tools and distinctions it supplies can be employed across the whole range of nameable interpretive approaches.

Nonetheless, by selecting the terms I do and by treating them the way I do, I have written a study that is bound to be controversial. The simple reason for this is that all studies of narrative are controversial. Despite a burst of energetic and highly intelligent research over the last thirty years and the genuine progress that has been made, there is not yet a consensus on any of the key issues in the study of narrative. If, like language, narrative is an inevitable human capability that we deploy every day without conscious effort, it is also, like language, a complex and fascinating field that often seems to defy our best analytical efforts. at exactitude. Therefore, and above all else, I have aimed at clarity in this introduction to narrative. I have also been highly selective in recommending, at the ends of Chapters Two through Fourteen, secondary texts that seem at this date to have stood the test of time (though for some areas, like hypertext narrative, the works have only barely been tested). At the same time, it is important to acknowledge here the assistance I have received from the work on narrative by many brilliant scholars, among them: M. M. Bakhtin, Mieke Bal, Ann Banfield, Roland Barthes, Emile Benveniste, Wayne Booth, David Bordwell, Edward Branigan, Claude Bremond, Peter Brooks, Ross Chambers, Seymour
Chatman, Dorrit Cohn, Jonathan Culler, Jacques Derrida, Umberto Eco, Monika Fludernik, Gérard Genette, A. J. Greimas, David Herman, Paul Hernadi, Wolfgang Iser, Roman Jakobson, Fredric Jameson, Robert Kellogg, Frank Kermode, George P. Landow, Claude Lévi-Strauss, Wallace Martin, Scott
McCloud, J. Hillis Miller, Bill Nichols, Roy Pascal, Gerald Prince, Vladimir
Propp, Peter J. Rabinowtiz, Eric Rabkin, David Richter, Paul Ricoeur, Brian Richardson, Robert Scholes, Shlomith Rimmon-Kenan, Marie-Laure Ryan, Saint Augustine, Victor Shklovsky, Franz Stanzel, Tzvetan Todorov, Boris Tomashesvsky, Hayden White, and Trevor Whittock.

I want to give special thanks for hands-on assistance to Josie Dixon who catched on to the idea of this book right away and never failed in her encouragement. Her successor at Cambridge University Press, Ray Ryan, together with Rachel De Wachter, gave helpful guidance during the later stages. Derek Attridge read at least two versions of the manuscript for Cambridge and made some sharp suggestions which I incorporated. Fiona Goodchild, Jon Robert Pearce, Paul Hernadi, and Anita Abbott all read it through (the latter more than once!). I am thankful to them for their many shrewd and helpful comments. To my teaching assistants and many students over the years in a course called “The Art of Narrative,” I send my thanks for their ability and (more important) their willingness to pose wonderful questions I never would have thought to ask. Finally, thanks are long overdue to my former colleague Hugh Kenner, whose ability to make revelatory connections, and to do so with an efficiency that always surprises, is to my mind unsurpassed.
Preface to the second edition

Narrative existed long before people gave it a name and tried to figure out how it works. It comes to us so naturally that, when we start to examine it, we are a bit like Monsieur Jourdain in Molière’s Le bourgeois gentilhomme, who discovered he had been speaking prose all his life without knowing it. Accordingly, in this revised and expanded second edition, I have continued to imagine as my first reader someone without any preconceptions about the field of narrative. I trust this has kept me honest to the degree that it has helped me to look with a critical eye at my own preconceptions. In the interval since the final draft of the first edition of The Cambridge Introduction to Narrative was sent to the press (on, of all dates, September 11, 2001), much has been published in the robust field of narrative study, including four fine introductions to narrative as a specifically literary form, each of which, in its distinctive way, works well as a complement to this book. The interval saw much else, including the Routledge Encyclopedia of Narrative Theory, a scrupulously edited volume that is as comprehensive as it is indispensable.

I see all of this work, along with the work that has gone before, falling into an inverted pyramid. The present book is situated where the pyramid comes to a point: the transaction between the mind and the narrative medium that makes narrative happen. As such, this book, like the first edition, is not an overview of approaches to narrative. It is, rather, my best attempt to harvest and make readable what is known about how audiences and the forms of narrative interact. As such, it draws on the overlapping elements of formalist, reader-oriented, cognitive, and rhetorical approaches, which encompass much of the work going on here at the base of this upside-down pyramid, and provides a foundation for any other viable approach. Because narrative is everywhere that human beings are, and involved in almost everything they do, this pyramid of knowledge just keeps expanding upward and outward.

I am grateful to Cambridge University Press and to my indefatigably helpful and enthusiastic editor, Ray Ryan, for encouraging me to enlarge the book for this second edition. In doing so, I have at the same time sought to economize sufficiently to keep the book affordable. The big change is the addition of two new chapters (Eleven and Twelve), one on the fiction/nonfiction distinction (“Narrative and truth”) and the other on the kinds of world-creating that narrative does (“Narrative worlds”). These subjects are both, currently, lively areas in the study of narrative and more closely intertwined than may at first appear. I have also made additions of varying length to a number of the other chapters at those points where I felt more was needed for clarity or where my thinking has changed. The names of some of the authors whose work has helped me along the way were absent from the first preface, either by inadvertence or because I was not then familiar with their work. Here they are now: Frederick Aldama, Jerome Bruner, Lubomír Doležel, Emma Kafalenos, Uri Margolin, Brian McHale, Alan Palmer, James Phelan, John Pier, Meir Sternberg, and Lisa Zunshine. Special thanks to Brian Richardson and James Phelan for their suggestions and words of encouragement for this edition. Thanks, too, to Edward Branigan, Tracy Larabee, Byram Abbott, and Jason Abbott for assistance in research. David Herman trained his eagle eye on the entire manuscript, rescuing me from error while expanding my mind. I am deeply grateful for this and for his unfailing support. Finally, as in the past, so now again, heartfelt thanks to my most trusted and beloved first and best reader, Anita Abbott.
Preface to the second edition

Acknowledgments

The author and publisher are grateful for permission to quote from the following texts.

“Taboo,” by Enrique Anderson Ibert, from Isabel Reade (trans.), The Other Side of the Mirror, copyright © 1966 by Southern Illinois University Press.