

SCOTLAND AND THE FICTIONS OF GEOGRAPHY

Focusing on the relationship between England and Scotland and the interaction between history and geography, Penny Fielding explores how Scottish literature in the Romantic period was shaped by the understanding of place and space.

The book examines geography as a form of regional, national and global definition, addressing national surveys, local stories, place-names and travel writing, and argues that the case of Scotland complicates the identification of Romanticism with the local. Fielding considers Scotland as 'North Britain' in a period when the north of Europe was becoming a strong cultural and political identity and explores ways in which Scotland was both formative and disruptive of British national consciousness.

Containing studies of Robert Burns, Walter Scott and James Hogg, as well as the lesser-known figures of Anne Grant and Margaret Chalmers, this study discusses an exceptionally broad range of historical, geographical, scientific, linguistic, antiquarian and political writing from throughout North Britain.

PENNY FIELDING is Senior Lecturer in the Department of English at the University of Edinburgh. Previous books include an edition of Walter Scott, The Monastery and Writing and Orality: Nationality, Culture, and Nineteenth-Century Scottish Fiction.

CAMBRIDGE STUDIES IN ROMANTICISM

Founding editor
PROFESSOR MARILYN BUTLER, University of Oxford

General editor
PROFESSOR JAMES CHANDLER, University of Chicago

Editorial board

JOHN BARRELL, University of York

PAUL HAMILTON, University of London

MARY JACOBUS, University of Cambridge

KENNETH JOHNSTON, Indiana University

ALAN LIU, University of California, Santa Barbara

JEROME MCGANN, University of Virginia

DAVID SIMPSON, University of California, Davis

This series aims to foster the best new work in one of the most challenging fields within English literary studies. From the early 1780s to the early 1830s a formidable array of talented men and women took to literary composition, not just in poetry, which some of them famously transformed, but in many modes of writing. The expansion of publishing created new opportunities for writers, and the political stakes of what they wrote were raised again by what Wordsworth called those 'great national events' that were 'almost daily taking place': the French Revolution, the Napoleonic and American wars, urbanisation, industrialisation, religious revival, an expanded empire abroad and the reform movement at home. This was an enormous ambition, even when it pretended otherwise. The relations between science, philosophy, religion and literature were reworked in texts such as Frankenstein and Biographia Literaria; gender relations in A Vindication of the Rights of Woman and Don Juan; journalism by Cobbett and Hazlitt; poetic form, content and style by the Lake School and the Cockney School. Outside Shakespeare studies, probably no body of writing has produced such a wealth of response or done so much to shape the responses of modern criticism. This indeed is the period that saw the emergence of those notions of 'literature' and of literary history, especially national literary history, on which modern scholarship in English has been founded.

The categories produced by Romanticism have also been challenged by recent historicist arguments. The task of the series is to engage both with a challenging corpus of Romantic writings and with the changing field of criticism they have helped to shape. As with other literary series published by Cambridge, this one will represent the work of both younger and more established scholars, on either side of the Atlantic and elsewhere.

For a complete list of titles published, see end of book.

SCOTLAND AND THE FICTIONS OF GEOGRAPHY

North Britain, 1760–1830

PENNY FIELDING

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS
Cambridge, New York, Melbourne, Madrid, Cape Town, Singapore, São Paulo, Delhi

Cambridge University Press The Edinburgh Building, Cambridge CB2 8RU, UK

Published in the United States of America by Cambridge University Press, New York

www.cambridge.org Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9780521895149

© Penny Fielding 2008

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2008

Printed in the United Kingdom at the University Press, Cambridge

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloguing in Publication data Fielding, Penny.

Scotland and the fictions of geography: North Britain, 1760–1830 / Penny Fielding.
p. cm. – (Cambridge studies in romanticism)
Includes bibliographical references and index.
15BN 978-0-521-89514-9 (hardback)

1. Scottish literature–18th century–History and criticism. 2. Scottish literature–19th century–History and criticism. 3. English literature–Scottish authors–History and criticism.

4. Place (Philosophy) in literature. 5. Geographical perception—Scotland—History. 6. Literature and society—Scotland—History. 7. Literature and society—Great Britain–History. 8. Human geography–Scotland–History. 9. Romanticism–Scotland.

10. Romanticism–Great Britain. I. Title. II. Series.

PR8555.F54 2008

820.9′9411–dc22 2008025661

ISBN-978-0-521-89514-9 hardback

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication, and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

For Heather Murray and in memory of Linda Bradley

Contents

Acknowledgements Introduction		page viii
		1
I	North Britain	13
2	Burns, place and language	40
3	Great North Roads: The geometries of the nation	71
4	Antiquarianism and the inscription of the nation	101
5	Ultima Thule: The limits of the north	130
6	Norths: James Hogg and post-Enlightenment space	161
Notes		189
Bibliography		216
Index		230

Acknowledgements

I am grateful to the Arts and Humanities Research Council for funding a period of leave that allowed me to bring this book to completion.

My research had one of its earliest outings during a year I spent at the University of Pennsylvania. I thank all my friends there, and particularly John Richetti for his generous hospitality and for arranging the talk at which my North Britain project started to take shape. I am also very grateful to Stuart Curran for introducing me to the poetry of Margaret Chalmers. Other parts of the book benefited greatly from exchanges following talks or conference papers, and I especially want to thank Janet Sorensen for organising a very stimulating and congenial visit to Chicago and Indiana that helped me finish the book. I am very grateful to James Chandler for innumerable insights into Romanticism (and the rules of baseball). I have learned a great deal from conversations with and the work of Leith Davis, Ina Ferris, Nigel Leask, Yoon Sun Lee, Alison Lumsden, Caroline McCracken-Flesher, Fiona Robertson, Anne Rowland, Maureen McLane, John Plotz, Erik Simpson and Graham Tulloch. As is the case for everyone working in Scottish Romanticism, I am greatly indebted to the great intellectual generosity and friendship of Ian Duncan, and would particularly like to thank Peter Garside for his help with and support for this project.

Many people answered specific queries, and I thank Gill Hughes for her unfailing and invaluable supply of information about Hogg; Ian Campbell Ross for help with eighteenth-century novels; and Charlie Withers, for answering questions about proper geography. My colleagues at Edinburgh were unfailingly supportive. Bob Irvine, Susan Manning and Alex Thomson have consistently enlarged my understanding of Scottish Romantic writing, and Randall Stevenson's help and patience were very much appreciated. Claire Colebrook, James Loxley, Lee Spinks and Andrew Taylor were wonderful sources of encouragement, information and conviviality.

viii

Acknowledgements

ix

My research was greatly assisted by the staff at the National Library of Scotland, and it is a real pleasure to work there. Linda Bree at Cambridge University Press made the editorial process run very smoothly. Linda Tym tracked down the last recalcitrant notes and lightened the load of preparing the manuscript.

For forms of help, support and inspiration too numerous to mention, heartfelt thanks go to Iain Ashman, Pam Beasant, Dermot Cavanagh, Aileen Douglas, Paul Fielding, John Lyon, Sally Mapstone, Milo Paich, Jen Richards, Barbara and Dan Traister and Karina Williamson.

An earlier version of the first section of Chapter 2 appeared in Leith Davis, Ian Duncan and Janet Sorensen (eds.), Scotland and the Borders of Romanticism (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2004). A few paragraphs of the last section of the same chapter appeared in The Eighteenth Century: Theory and Practice 39 (1998): 25–43. Part of Chapter 6 appeared in Studies in Hogg and his World 9 (1998): 45–63. I am very grateful to the editors for permission to use this material.