

Contents

List of illustrations [page vii]
List of figures [viii]
List of tables [x]
Acknowledgements [xii]
Bibliographic abbreviations [xiii]

Introduction: ‘A period of orchestral starvation’? Perceptions of London concert life, 1795–1813 [1]
Source material and methodology [4]
A revised opinion [8]

1 The makings of a myth: from Haydn to the Philharmonic [9]
Haydn in London concert life [9]
The founding of the Philharmonic Society [13]
The Philharmonic ‘myth’ [17]

2 The ‘rage’ for music: West End concert culture and patterns of social change [23]
Commercial society and the emergence of a public concert culture [23]
Concert life after 1795 [30]

3 Continuity and disruption in London concert programming,
1795–1813 [32]
Subscription concerts after Haydn [32]
Haydn in London concert life, 1795–1813 [35]
Programme organization in non-subscription events [38]
Re-evaluating London concert life, 1795–1813 [39]
Johann Peter Salomon (1745–1815) [41]
Franz Cramer (1772–1848) [47]
Individuals and institutions [51]

4 Institutional continuity in London concert life,
1795–1813 [53]
The New Musical Fund [53]
The Vocal Concerts [57]
Billington–Naldi–Braham concerts [72]

5 Musical life outside the West End [84]
 The pleasure gardens [84]
 Vauxhall Gardens (1732–1859) [86]
 The Vauxhall ‘Lists’ [87]
 Ranelagh Gardens (1742–1804) [94]
 Re-evaluating the pleasure gardens [97]
 Musical life in the ‘City’ [101]
 ‘Commercial and middle-class values’ [103]
 The London Tavern [107]
 The Harmonic and the Philharmonic [112]

6 Public music in private spheres: domestic music in London, 1795–1813 [116]
 Domestic concerts [116]
 The Nobility Concerts [118]
 Ladies’ Concerts [119]
 Amateur Concerts [123]
 The piano in England [124]
 Musical arrangement [128]
 The significance of the piano transcription [134]

7 ‘A period of orchestral starvation?’ [137]
 The ‘professionalization’ of musical culture [141]

Notes [147]
Bibliography [197]
 Newspaper sources (1791–1813) [197]
 Archival collections [197]
 Primary sources (to 1830) [198]
 Secondary sources (from 1830) [199]
Index [206]