CROSS-BORDER INTERNET DISPUTE RESOLUTION

The Internet has the potential to increase the number of cross-border disputes between a wide range of different users. For many Internet disputes, the use of online dispute resolution (ODR) becomes critical. ODR uses information technology (such as expert systems) and Internet communication applications (such as webforms or web filing platforms) to resolve disputes outside the courts. Although ODR is a progeny of alternative dispute resolution (ADR), using some of the same processes such as mediation and arbitration, ODR is different in that it adds new and transformative technology and processes. This book sets out the process standards with which ODR (and in particular online arbitration) should comply, shows how these standards can be implemented in the real world and considers applicable law and enforcement, thus providing a blueprint of how online arbitration processes should be devised.

JULIA HÖRNLE is a Senior Lecturer at the Centre for Commercial Law Studies, School of Law, Queen Mary University of London.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book is the result of four years of research for a PhD dissertation, which I successfully submitted in December 2007.

My greatest debt in producing this book is owed to the two supervisors of my doctoral research, Professor Chris Reed and Professor Ian Walden at the Centre of Commercial Law Studies, who first introduced me to the subject of Internet law seven years ago when I switched from legal practice to academia. Without their inspiration, enthusiasm, patience and criticism, this book would never have been produced. The subject of ODR was first brought to my attention by Arthur Marriott QC, who kindly trusted me to write a chapter on this subject for Bernstein's Handbook of Arbitration and Dispute Resolution Practice, and to whom I really owe the initial idea for this book. I was also influenced by my involvement in the UN Expert Group in ODR and the debates at the ODR Conference in London, which Gregory Hunt and I organised in 2004. Professor Ethan Katsh, Dr Thomas Schultz, Colin Rule, Mirèze Philippe and Professor Louise-Ellen Teitz have all contributed to my thoughts. I would like to thank my partner Sean, who has put up with my working during the small hours on many occasions and who has selflessly supported me during this time. Finally, and most importantly, I must mention my parents; without their role-model, encouragement and love, this book would not have been written.
