

THE THEOLOGY OF DEBT IN LATE MEDIEVAL ENGLISH LITERATURE

Exploring debt's permutations in Middle English texts, Anne Schuurman makes the bold claim that the capitalist spirit has its roots in Christian penitential theology. Her argument challenges the longstanding belief that faith and theological doctrine in the Middle Ages were inimical to the development of market economies, showing that the same idea of debt is in fact intrinsic to both. The double penitential–financial meaning of debt, and the spiritual paradoxes it creates, is a linchpin of scholastic and vernacular theology, and of the imaginative literature of late medieval England. Focusing on the doubleness of debt, this book traces the dynamic by which the Christian ascetic ideal, in its rejection of material profit and wealth acquisition, ends up producing precisely what it condemns. This series of critical books seeks to cover the whole area of literature written in the major medieval languages – the main European vernaculars, and medieval Latin and Greek – during the period c.1100–1500. Its chief aim is to publish and stimulate fresh scholarship and criticism on medieval literature, special emphasis being placed on understanding major works of poetry, prose, and drama in relation to the contemporary culture and learning which fostered them.

My debt of gratitude has been accruing for many years, but it is one that I am happy to owe. The research and writing of this book were supported by a generous grant from the Social Science and Humanities Research Council of Canada. The line of inquiry that ended up here began at the University of Alberta when I was finishing my doctoral dissertation on shame and guilt in Chaucer's narrative poetry, and for this I am grateful to Stephen R. Reimer; his insightful comments and questions, many of which I had no answers for at the time, brought me to the right point of departure. I would like to thank Andrew Galloway for chairing a fruitful session on economics and Middle English literature at the IMC in Leeds and Kara Gaston for inviting me to speak at the University of Toronto's Premodern Research Symposium, where I received kind encouragement and excellent questions about the Middle English charter lyrics. At the University of Western Ontario, I am grateful to my colleagues for their support and helpful comments on various aspects of the project, particularly Jane Toswell, Richard Moll, Alison Conway, Bryce Traister, Kate Stanley, Mary Helen McMurran, and Matthew Rowlinson. Warmest thanks to Emily Pez and Rebecca Power for their careful eyes and meticulous work in copy-editing the book and preparing the index. Emily Hockley and George Laver at Cambridge University Press were amiably supportive during the review process and have guided the book to production with unfailing competence. The book was greatly improved thanks to the astute and generous suggestions of two anonymous readers for the Press. I am continually dazzled and humbled by the learnedness and integrity of my fellow medievalists.

I would like to thank my father Henry Schuurman for the general and the particular – for being my first teacher and for invaluable conversations about debt, the Franciscans, and the nature of money. To Sofia, Isabel, and Ada, I am deeply and affectionately thankful for the gift of perspective.

Finally, the debt I owe to my wife Zoë Sinel, my ideal interlocutor, my most incisive and faithful reader, is truly measureless. Every good idea took shape in our conversations. Any errors or oversights that remain are mine alone.
