The Body of the Conquistador

This fascinating history explores the dynamic relationship between overseas colonisation and the bodily experience of eating. It reveals the importance of food to the colonial project in Spanish America and reconceptualises the role of European colonial expansion in shaping the emergence of ideas of race during the Age of Discovery. Rebecca Earle shows that anxieties about food were fundamental to Spanish understandings of the new environment they inhabited and their interactions with the native populations of the new world. Settlers wondered whether Europeans could eat new world food, whether Amerindians could eat European food and what would happen to each if they did. By taking seriously their ideas about food we gain a richer understanding of how settlers understood the physical experience of colonialism and of how they thought about the central features of the colonial project. The result is simultaneously a history of food, of colonialism and of race.

Rebecca Earle is Professor of History at the University of Warwick. Her previous publications include The Return of the Native: Indians and Mythmaking in Spanish America, 1810–1930 (2008) and Spain and the Independence of Colombia (2000).
Critical Perspectives on Empire

Editors
Professor Catherine Hall
University College London
Professor Mrinalini Sinha
Pennsylvania State University
Professor Kathleen Wilson
State University of New York, Stony Brook

Critical Perspectives on Empire is a major series of ambitious, cross-disciplinary works in the emerging field of critical imperial studies. Books in the series explore the connections, exchanges and mediations at the heart of national and global histories, the contributions of local as well as metropolitan knowledge and the flows of people, ideas and identities facilitated by colonial contact. To that end, the series not only offers a space for outstanding scholars working at the intersection of several disciplines to bring to wider attention the impact of their work; it also takes a leading role in reconfiguring contemporary historical and critical knowledge, of the past and of ourselves.

A full list of titles published in the series can be found at:
www.cambridge.org/cpempire
The body of the conquistador: food, race and the colonial experience in Spanish America, 1492–1700
Rebecca Earle
Frontmatter

© Rebecca Earle 2012
This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2012
Printed in the United Kingdom at the University Press, Cambridge

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloguing in Publication data
Earle, Rebecca.
The body of the conquistador: food, race and the colonial experience in Spanish America, 1492–1700 / Rebecca Earle.
p. cm. – (Critical perspectives on empire)
Includes bibliographical references and index.

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party Internet websites referred to in this publication, and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.
This book is for Gabriel and Isaac
Contents

List of figures  page viii
Acknowledgements  x

Introduction: Food and the colonial experience  1
1 Humoralism and the colonial body  19
2 Protecting the European body  54
3 Providential fertility  84
4 ‘Maize, which is their wheat’  118
5 ‘You will become like them if you eat their food’  156
6 Mutable bodies in Spain and the Indies  187
Epilogue  217

Bibliography  220
Index  255
Figures

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Figure</th>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>Antonio de Herrera, Descripción de las Indias occidentales (Madrid, 1601), title-page (detail), The John Carter Brown Library at Brown University</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>The humours</td>
<td>27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>Christ as the Mystic Vine, seventeenth century, alabaster tablet, Museo Pedro de Osma, Lima</td>
<td>59</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>Giovanni Stradano [Jan van der Straet], Discovery of America: Vespucci Landing in America, c. 1587–9, pen and brown ink, brown wash, heightened with white, over black chalk, Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York</td>
<td>80</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>German woodcut of a new-world scene, c. 1505, Spencer Collection, The New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations</td>
<td>123</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Lorenz Fries, Undervisung und uszlegunge Der Gartha Marina oder die mer cartē (Strassburg, 1530), title-page, British Library Board</td>
<td>125</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>Gonzalo Fernández de Oviedo, Historia general de las Indias, primera parte (Seville, 1535), woodcut of a pineapple, book 7, chap. 13 (fol. 77v), British Library Board</td>
<td>128</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>Miguel Cabrera, De Lobo y de India, Albarasado, 1763, Museo de América, Madrid</td>
<td>130</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>‘Yndia Mexicana’, Codex Tudela, c. 1553, British Library Board</td>
<td>132</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
List of figures ix

12 José de Páez, De Español y Negra, Mulato, c. 1770–80 (detail), private collection 135
13 Antonio de Pereda, Kitchen Scene, c. 1650–5, Penrhyn Castle, the Douglas-Pennant Collection (National Trust) 138
15 Juan Sánchez Cotán, Still Life with Game Fowl, c. 1600, The Art Institute of Chicago 140
16 Antonio de la Calancha, Corónica moralizada del orden de San Agustín en el Perú (Barcelona, 1638), title-page (detail), British Library Board 158
17 Felipe de Guaman Poma de Ayala, Nueva corónica y buen gobierno (1615–16), drawing 204, ‘The royal administrator and his low-status dinner guests: the mestizo, the mulatto and the tributary Indian’, Det Kongelige Bibliotek, Copenhagen 162
18 Felipe de Guaman Poma de Ayala, Nueva corónica y buen gobierno (1615–16), drawing 321, ‘Creolized Indians spend their time singing and amusing themselves, rather than serving God’, Det Kongelige Bibliotek, Copenhagen 178
19 De Español y de Mestiza, Castiza, late eighteenth century, private collection 185
20 Juan Rodríguez Juárez, De Castiso y Española Produce Español, c. 1725, Breamore House 195
21 Miguel Cabrera, De Español y Albina, Torna Atras, 1763, private collection 197
Acknowledgements

‘But are there any sources?’, I was often asked when I explained that I was researching early colonial attitudes towards food. Sources in fact proved plentiful, thanks in part to the help of people such as Linda Newson and Frank Eissa Barroso, who found me documents from archives in two countries, and Jorge Cañizares Esguerra, Michael Hamerly, Jai Kharbanda, Irven Resnick, Christián Roa, James Simpson and Deborah Toner, who drew my attention to particularly useful texts. Benjamin Braude shared his knowledge of the ‘African Ham’, Laura Lewis advised me on colonial magic and John Elliott helped me when I was foundering in the shallow waters of Spain’s sixteenth-century transatlantic trade. Leslie Tobias-Olsen and Magali Carrera assisted me in finding images and Richard Kagan discussed ‘pecker checkers’ over breakfast. I am also very grateful for the systemic advice offered by colleagues who read sections of this work – particularly Abel Alves, Emily Berquist, Andrea Cadelo, John Chasteen, Tony McFarlane, Jeffrey Pilcher, Claudia Stein and Guy Thompson. Many others allowed me to bend their ear about whatever bread-related conundrum was occupying my mind at the moment. I must also thank the staff at the lovely John Carter Brown Library for making my stay in Providence so pleasant, and the Library itself for granting me a fellowship. My fellow JCB ‘scholars’ Ari Zighelboim and Vin Caretta listened patiently to my daily reports on the intricacies of Catholic doctrine, and offered so much good advice that there is really no point attempting to enumerate it.

I am particularly indebted to my linguistically superior colleagues who shared their expertise in Latin, Greek and Nahuatl. Peter Pormann offered advice about medicine in the ancient world and generously translated swathes of Galen’s Greek. Mary Clayton, Erica Hosselkus and Camilla Townsend deciphered bits of Nahuatl, as well as, in Cami’s case, also helping me think about the project as a whole. James Muldoon translated passages of De Indiarum Jure and talked with me about Juan de Solórzano Pereira. And to say Andrew Laird helped me with the Latin bits would be a travesty of his contribution to this book. To all these friends and colleagues I am deeply grateful: thank you.

The beginnings, and completion, of this project coincided with difficult moments in my own life, and I would like, finally, to thank Lizzie Collingham, Cliff, Lisa and Susan Earle, Judy Foreman, David Mond, Thomas Seidel, Jennifer Smyth and Claudia Stein for being such good friends.