Contents

Acknowledgements                      page vi

Introduction                                1

1 Education and its research               13

2 The nature of social science             29

3 The idea of method                       49

4 The nature of philosophy                 63

5 The art of research                      77

6 Language, truth and meaning              95

7 On the dominant nature of educational research and its shortcomings 106

8 Research, policy and practical reasoning 123

9 The limits of measurement                139

10 Parenting and government intervention in the family (case study I) 155

11 Researching happiness and well-being (case study II) 172

12 Philosophy and research                 188

Notes                                      203

References                                 211

Index                                      219