CONTENTS

Acknowledgments ix

Introduction: The Conquest of Eros 1
The Debate about Ancient and Modern Tyranny 12
Remarks on Method 20

1. Is There an Ontology of Tyranny? 26
   The Primordial and the Transcendental as Fundamental Perspectives on Political Existence 32
   Education and Imitation: Images of the Soul in Plato’s Dialogues 35
   The Modern Point of Departure for the New Science of Politics 63
   The Hobbesian Narrowing of Machiavelli’s New Science of Politics 75

2. The Tyrant and the Statesman in Plato’s Political Philosophy and Machiavelli’s Rejoinder 81
   The Lover of the City 83
   The Hidden Tyrant 94
   The Hidden Founding 108
   Paradoxes of the Tyrannical Founding 119
   Machiavelli and the Sophists 131

3. Superlative Virtue, Monarchy, and Political Community in Aristotle’s Politics 141
   Monarchy and the Political Community 143
CONTENTS

The Claim of Superlative Virtue in the Debate about Justice 156
A Godlike Man in the City? 162
Monarchy, Reason, and Nature 169
Arendt on the Household and the Community 180
The Global Household 183

4. Tyranny and the Science of Ruling in Xenophon’s Political Thought 186
   Roads to the Education of Cyrus: The Distinctiveness of Xenophon’s Political Thought 187
   Cyrus’s Imperialistic Revolution 199
   The Peloponnesian War and the Thucydidean Context 210

5. Machiavelli, Xenophon, and Xenophon’s Cyrus 228
   Virtue Defined as the Mastery of Fortuna 232
   Cyrus the Great in Machiavelli’s Discourses 236
   Subverting the Traditional Catalogue of the Virtues 246
   Machiavelli’s Rhetorical Employment of Xenophon in the Appeal to Antiquity 257

   How Original Is Machiavelli? The Relationship of Virtue and Fortuna 274
   Sundering Diotima’s Ladder: The City of Man, the City of God, and Machiavelli’s New Synthesis 296
   The Three Stages of Mastering Fortuna 325

7. The Republic in Motion: Machiavelli’s Vision of the New Rome 345
   The Classical Understanding of Imperialism as a Mode of Tyranny 347
   Virtue, Necessity, and Choice in the Founding of Cities 351
   The Cycle of Regimes 363
   The Republic Perfected by Chance 383
   The Rise and Fall of the New Rome 406
   Interlude: Machiavelli and Religion 419
   Conclusion: Tyranny Ancient and Modern 433
   The Many Faces of Machiavelli 433
CONTENTS

The Two Corridors to Modernity (Dark and Light) 445
The Torture of Nature? 456
The Phenomenology of Tyranny 478
The Transition to Totalitarianism and the Will of the People: The Limits of This Study 498

Epilogue: The Hermeneutical Problem of Tyranny 513
Bibliography 519
Index 537