NATIONALISM AND THE RULE OF LAW

The relationship between nationalism and the rule of law has been largely neglected by scholars despite the fact that, separately, they have often captured public discourse and emerged as critical concepts for the social sciences. This book provides the first systematic account of this relationship. The book develops an analytical framework for understanding the interactions of nationalism and the rule of law by focusing on the domains of citizenship, transitional justice, and international justice, and engages these insights further in a detailed empirical analysis of three case studies from the former Yugoslavia. The author argues that although the tensions and contradictions between nationalism and the rule of law have become more apparent in the post–Cold War era, they can also be harnessed for productive purposes. In exploring the role of law in managing and transforming nationalism, the book emphasizes the deliberative character of legal processes and offers an original perspective on the power of international law to reshape public discourse, politics, and legal orders.

Iavor Rangelov is Global Security Research Fellow at the London School of Economics and Political Science and Co-Chair of the London Transitional Justice Network.
Nationalism and the Rule of Law

LESSONS FROM THE BALKANS AND BEYOND

Iavor Rangelov

London School of Economics and Political Science

Cambridge University Press
For my parents
CONTENTS

Acknowledgments
Introduction
PART I  NATIONALISM AND THE RULE OF LAW
   1  Ethnic Citizenship
   2  Transitional Justice
   3  International Criminal Justice
PART II  THREE CASES FROM THE FORMER YUGOSLAVIA
   5  Contesting Atrocity and Identity: The War Crimes Debate and Transitional Justice in Croatia
   6  Resistance, Pluralization, and International Justice in Serbia
Conclusion: Lessons from the Balkans and Beyond
Bibliography
Index
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I am deeply grateful to a number of colleagues, friends, and institutions for making this book possible. Mary Kaldor first encouraged me to pursue doctoral studies at the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE) nearly a decade ago and ever since, working with her on this and other projects has been a fascinating journey of intellectual exploration and discovery. Nataša Kandić generously shared her unique insight into the issues I was grappling with in the Balkans; in the end, our collaboration enabled me to become a participant in many of the processes in the region I was studying. Nicola Lacey encouraged me to engage with law and lawyers and gave me the reassurance and support I needed to cross disciplinary boundaries. I have accumulated enormous debts of gratitude to all of them in the course of writing this book and thank them warmly.

My research on the Balkans was shaped by countless conversations and interactions across the region, some of which have developed into great friendships. The Humanitarian Law Center in Belgrade and its dedicated staff provided a most hospitable base for conducting my field research in Serbia and extending it throughout the region. Jelka Zorn helped me secure key contacts and materials in Slovenia and spent long hours discussing my ideas in the cafés of Ljubljana. Tvrtko Jakovina was incredibly generous with his time and connections in Zagreb and enriched my research with his insightful reflections on the history of Yugoslavia. The Fellows of the Faculty Development in South East Europe Programme at the LSE were always available to meet with me and discuss the issues I had on my mind whenever they were in London or I was in the region. I am grateful to them and everyone else in the Balkans who engaged with me formally and informally, and often repeatedly, in the course of conducting my research.

Many friends and colleagues provided critical feedback on different parts and versions of the material presented in the book. They are in no way responsible for any lapses in judgment or knowledge. For their advice and comments I am grateful to Amélie Barras, Steve Bell, Saša Drezgić, Mohanad Hage-Ali, David Held, Rob Howse, Milanka Šaponja-Hadžić, Gerry Simpson, Jelena Stevančević, Marika Theros, and Kristian Ulrichsen. At the LSE, I have benefited from endless discussions in the Nationalism seminars run by John Breuilly and John Hutchinson, and with colleagues in the departments of Government and International Development and the Centre for the Study of Global Governance. I would like to express my appreciation for the enthusiastic support of my editor, John Berger. The book owes a great deal to his faith in the project and expert guidance in seeing it through. Pippa Bore provided invaluable assistance at the final stages of producing the book, for which I thank her warmly.

I have been fortunate to present my ideas to diverse audiences over the years and these engagements shaped my evolving thinking and enriched my work immensely. I am grateful to the organizations and institutions that invited me to participate in conferences, seminars, and workshops: Association for the Study of Ethnicity and Nationalism at the LSE; Association for the Study of Nationalities at Columbia University; Cambridge University; European Policy Centre; Humanitarian Law Center, Belgrade; Institute for European Studies, FU Brussels; Instituto Affari Internazionali; International Studies Association; Inter-University Center, Dubrovnik; King’s College London; Lund University; Minerva Center for Human Rights, Hebrew University; Osteuropa-Institut, FU Berlin; Oxford University; Renner Institute; Südosteuropa-Gesellschaft; University of Gothenburg; University of Ljubljana; University of Sarajevo; and University of Zagreb. My students at the LSE and the University of Sarajevo have often been my most stimulating and challenging critics over the years. I thank them for shaping the ideas in this book and I am sure they will recognize their influence.

I gratefully acknowledge the generous financial support for my doctoral studies provided by the Department of Government at the Acknowledgments

LSE and the Open Society Institute. My field research in Slovenia was funded by the Central Research Fund of the University of London. In Croatia and Serbia, field research conducted for a related project and funded by the Charles Stuart Mott Foundation was crucial for advancing my work on the book. I am also grateful to the research and training program European Foreign & Security Policy Studies, funded by Riksbankens Jubileumsfond, Compagnia di San Paolo, and VolkswagenStiftung, which supported my postdoctoral research and visiting fellowships at the European Policy Centre in Brussels, EU Institute for Security Studies in Paris, Institut Barcelona d'Estudis Internacionales, and T.M.C. Asser Instituut in The Hague.

I owe the greatest debt of all to my parents, Elena and Percho, to whom this book is dedicated.