THE CONSTITUTION AND THE FUTURE OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE IN AMERICA

The Constitution and the Future of Criminal Justice in America draws together leading scholars from law, psychology, and criminology to address timely and important topics in U.S. criminal justice. The book tackles cutting-edge issues related to terrorism, immigration, and transnational crime, and to the increasingly important connections between criminal law and the fields of social science and neuroscience. It also provides critical new perspectives on intractable problems such as the right to counsel, race and policing, and the proper balance between security and privacy. By putting legal theory and doctrine into a concrete and accessible context, the book will advance public policy and scholarly debates alike. This collection of chapters is appropriate for anyone interested in understanding the current state of criminal justice and its future challenges.

John T. Parry is Professor of Law at Lewis & Clark Law School. He is the author of Understanding Torture: Law, Violence, and Political Identity (2010), as well as numerous articles on issues relating to criminal law, foreign relations law, and transnational and international criminal law. He is also coauthor of Criminal Law: Cases, Statutes, and Lawyering Strategies (2005, 2d ed. 2010) and a member of the American Law Institute. Parry's scholarly work focuses broadly on legal structures that restrain or permit the exercise of state power on individuals, with a particular emphasis on criminal law, civil rights law, and foreign relations law.

L. Song Richardson is Professor of Law at the University of Iowa College of Law. Her legal career includes work as a state and federal public defender, as an assistant counsel at the NAACP Legal Defense Fund representing capital defendants in habeas cases, and as a partner in a boutique criminal law firm. She is a member of the American Law Institute. Her research explores the legal implications of mind sciences research on criminal procedure, criminal law, and policing. Her work has been published by law journals at Yale, Berkeley, Duke, Northwestern, and Cornell, among others.
The Constitution and the Future of Criminal Justice in America

Edited by

JOHN T. PARRY
Lewis & Clark Law School

L. SONG RICHARDSON
The University of Iowa College of Law
The constitution and the future of criminal justice in America / edited by John T. Parry, Lewis & Clark University Law School, L. Song Richardson, The University of Iowa College of Law.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party Internet Web sites referred to in this publication and does not guarantee that any content on such Web sites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.
Contents

Notes on Contributors  page vii
Acknowledgments  xi

Introduction
John T. Parry and L. Song Richardson  1

PART I FOUNDATIONS – THE SCOPE OF CRIMINAL LAW AND ACCESS TO COUNSEL
1. The Past and Future of the Right to an Attorney for Poor People Accused of Crimes
   Stephen B. Bright  13
2. Criminal Justice in America: Constitutionalization without Foundation
   Markus D. Dubber  27

PART II RACE AND CRIMINAL PROCEDURE
3. The Challenges of “Quality of Life” Policing for the Fourth Amendment
   Susan A. Bandes  45
4. Implicit Racial Bias and the Fourth Amendment
   L. Song Richardson  59

PART III POLICING AND PRIVACY
5. The Exclusionary Rule: Its Effect on Innocence and Guilt
   Tonja Jacobi  79
6. Consent, Dignity, and the Failure of Scattershot Policing
   Janice Nadler  93
vi Contents

7. Neurotechnologies at the Intersection of Criminal Procedure and Constitutional Law 109
   Amanda C. Pustilnik

PART IV TECHNOLOGY AND THE SURVEILLANCE SOCIETY

8. Information and Social Control 137
   Wayne A. Logan

9. Is the Fourth Amendment Relevant in a Technological Age? 152
   Christopher Slobogin

PART V CONFESSIONS AND MIRANDA

10. False Confessions and the Constitution: Problems, Possibilities, and Solutions 169
    Richard A. Leo

11. The Foggy Future of Miranda 187
    Emily Hughes

PART VI CONVICTION, SENTENCING, AND INCARCERATION

12. Collateral Consequences of Criminal Conviction 205
    Gabriel J. Chin

13. Psychopathy, Criminal Responsibility, Punishment, and the Eighth Amendment 222
    Adam R. Fox and Reid Griffith Fontaine

PART VII EMERGENCIES AND BORDERS – IMMIGRATION, TERRORISM, NATIONAL SECURITY, AND TRANSNATIONAL CRIME

14. Preemption and Proportionality in State and Local Crimmigration Law 241
    Juliet P. Stumpf

15. Embattled Paradigms: The “War on Terror” and the Criminal Justice System 260
    Susan N. Herman

16. The Civilianization of Military Jurisdiction 287
    Stephen I. Vladeck

    John T. Parry

Index 333
Contributors

Susan A. Bandes is the Centennial Distinguished Professor of Law at DePaul University College of Law. She is a prolific scholar in the areas of criminal procedure, government accountability, and the role of emotion in law. Her articles appear in the Yale, University of Chicago, Michigan, and Stanford law reviews, among others. Her book The Passions of Law was published by New York University Press in 2000. Prior to joining the DePaul faculty, she was staff counsel for the ACLU of Illinois and a staff attorney for the Illinois Office of the State Appellate Defender.

Stephen B. Bright is President and Senior Counsel of the Southern Center for Human Rights in Atlanta and Visiting Lecturer at The Yale Law School. He has represented people facing the death penalty at trials and on appeals and prisoners in challenges to inhumane conditions and practices; written essays and articles on the right to counsel, racial discrimination in the criminal justice system, judicial independence, and other topics that have appeared in scholarly publications, books, magazines, and newspapers; and testified before committees of both the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives. He received the American Bar Association’s Thurgood Marshall Award in 1998, the American Civil Liberties Union’s Roger Baldwin Medal of Liberty in 1991, and the National Legal Aid & Defender Association’s Kutak-Dodds Prize in 1992, among others.

Gabriel J. Chin is Professor of Law at the University of California Davis School of Law, where he writes and teaches in the areas of criminal law, race and law, and immigration. He is a former public defender and prosecutor, and his articles have appeared in the Cornell, UCLA, University of Pennsylvania, and Harvard Civil Rights–Civil Liberties law reviews, among others. His work has been cited by numerous courts, including the U.S. Supreme Court. He served as Reporter on the ABA Standards for Criminal Justice on Collateral Sanctions and Discretionary Disqualification of Convicted Persons, as well as on the Uniform Collateral Consequences of Conviction Act promulgated by the Uniform Law Commission.

Markus D. Dubber is Professor of Law at the University of Toronto. His scholarship focuses on theoretical, comparative, and historical aspects of criminal law. He is the author or editor of several books, including The Police Power: Patriarchy and the Foundations of American Government (Columbia University Press 2005), The New Police Science: The Police Power in Domestic and International Governance (edited with Mariana Valverde; Stanford University Press 2006), and a casebook on American criminal law.

Reid Griffith Fontaine is a Visiting Research Fellow in the Social Science Research Institute, Center for Child and Family Policy, at Duke University. He has authored more than thirty-five articles in law and psychology. His book The Mind of the Criminal: The Role of Developmental Social Cognition in Criminal Defense Law was published by Cambridge University Press in 2012.

Adam R. Fox is a lawyer and interdisciplinary philosophy and law scholar. He received his law degree at the University of Arizona and is currently a graduate student in the Department of Philosophy at Georgia State University.

Susan N. Herman is Centennial Professor of Law at Brooklyn Law School and President of the American Civil Liberties Union. She writes extensively on constitutional and criminal procedure topics for scholarly and other publications, ranging from law reviews and books to periodicals and online publications. Her most Democracy, was published by Oxford University Press in October 2011.

Emily Hughes is Professor and Bouma Fellow in Law at the University of Iowa College of Law. Her coauthored book, Federal Habeas Corpus: Cases and Materials (Carolina Academic Press), is in its second edition. She thanks
University of Iowa College of Law students Susan Elgin, Will Gyauch, Jessica Hlubek, Bradon Smith, and Tiffany Spoor for their assistance with various phases of this chapter. She also thanks her dean, Gail Agrawal, for her support, and the Iowa law faculty for commenting on an early draft.

Tonja Jacobi is Professor of Law at Northwestern University School of Law. She specializes in judicial behavior and strategy, examining how judges respond to institutional constraints and attempt to shape the incentives of parties before the court. She has a Ph.D. in political science from Stanford University and a law degree from the Australian National University. She has published in more than twenty peer-reviewed and law review journals and is currently working on a book about the causes and mechanisms of constitutional stability.
Richard A. Leo is a Professor of Law and Dean’s Circle Research Scholar at the University of San Francisco. He is the author of dozens of academic articles on police interrogation, false confessions, and/or wrongful convictions, as well as several books on these subjects, including Police Interrogation and American Justice (Harvard University Press 2008); The Wrong Guys: Murder, False Confessions and the Norfolk Four (New Press 2008, with Tom Wells); and, most recently, Confessions of Guilt: From Torture to Miranda and Beyond (Oxford University Press 2012, with George C. Thomas III). He has received numerous individual and career achievement awards for his research and publications, as well as Soros and Guggenheim Fellowships. In 2011 he was elected to the American Law Institute.

Wayne A. Logan is Gary & Sallyn Pajcic Professor of Law at Florida State University. He is author of Knowledge as Power: Criminal Registration and Community Notification Laws in America (Stanford University Press 2009).

Janice Nadler is Research Professor at the American Bar Foundation and Professor of Law at Northwestern University School of Law. She received a J.D. from the University of California at Berkeley and a Ph.D. in social psychology from the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign. Her scholarly interests lie at the intersection of law and psychology, and her research focuses on moral intuitions, compliance with the law, perceptions of injustice, negotiation, and dispute resolution.

John T. Parry is Professor of Law at Lewis & Clark Law School. He is the author of Understanding Torture: Law, Violence, and Political Identity (Michigan 2010), as well as numerous articles on issues relating to criminal law, foreign relations law, and transnational and international criminal law. He is also coauthor of Criminal Law: Cases, Statutes, and Lawyering Strategies (Lexis 2005, 2d ed. 2010) and a member of the American Law Institute. He thanks Tung Yin for helpful comments and Jenny Logan for research assistance.

Amanda C. Pustilnik is an Associate Professor at the University of Maryland's Francis King Carey School of Law, where she developed a course on law and neuroscience and teaches criminal law and evidence. She previously taught as a lecturer at Harvard Law School. She is the editor of the SSRN ejournal Law & Neuroscience and publishes and blogs on the intersections of neuroscience and criminal law.

L. Song Richardson is Professor of Law at the University of Iowa College of Law. Her legal career includes work as a state and federal public defender, as an assistant counsel at the NAACP Legal Defense Fund representing capital defendants in habeas cases, and as a partner in a boutique criminal law firm.
Notes on Contributors

She is a member of the American Law Institute. Her research explores the legal implications of mind sciences research on criminal procedure, criminal law, and policing. Her work has been published in law journals at Yale, Berkeley, Duke, Northwestern, and Cornell, among others.

Christopher Slobogin occupies the Milton Underwood Chair at Vanderbilt University Law School. He has written extensively about the Fourth Amendment and surveillance, including articles in the Chicago, Minnesota, and UCLA law reviews. In 2007 the University of Chicago Press published his book Privacy at Risk: The New Government Surveillance and the Fourth Amendment.

Stephen I. Vladeck is Professor of Law and Associate Dean for Scholarship at American University Washington College of Law. He was part of the legal team that successfully challenged the Bush administration’s use of military tribunals at Guantánamo Bay, Cuba, in Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, 548 U.S. 557 (2006), and he has coauthored party and amicus briefs in a host of other major lawsuits, many of which have challenged the U.S. government’s surveillance and detention of terrorism suspects. Vladeck is a coeditor of Aspen Publishers’ leading national security and counterterrorism law casebooks, a member of the American Law Institute, a senior editor of the peer-reviewed Journal of National Security Law and Policy, a senior contributor to the Lawfare blog, the Chair of the Section on Federal Courts of the Association of American Law Schools, the Supreme Court Fellow at the Constitution Project, and a Fellow at the Center on National Security at Fordham University School of Law. He thanks Gal Bruck and Pasha Sternberg for research assistance.
Many people helped produce this book. First and foremost are the participants in the conference “The Constitution in 2020: The Future of Criminal Justice,” held at Florida State University College of Law in October 2010, a group that includes many of the people who have contributed to this book. In particular, Susan A. Bandes, Jack Balkin, Reid Griffith Fontaine, Wayne A. Logan, Dan Markel, and the American Constitution Society made that conference possible. Thanks are due as well to our respective institutions: Lewis & Clark Law School and the University of Iowa College of Law. At Lewis & Clark, particular thanks are due to Dean Robert Klonoff and Associate Dean Brian Blum, as well as to Ed Brunet, Lisa Frenz, Andy Marion, and Sue Page. At the University of Iowa, thanks are due to Dean Gail Agrawal and to law students Solomon Chouicha and Taylor Whitten for their valuable assistance with advancing this book to completion. Finally, the support of John Berger at Cambridge University Press has been invaluable.