Contents

Acknowledgements
 ix

List of abbreviations
 x

1. Introduction: the pleasures of reason
   - Pleasure and logismos
   - Knowing and learning
   - Planning ahead
   - Remembering and anticipating
   - Reason and emotion
   - What the lion anticipates
   - Damascius and the donkey
   1

2. Plato on the pleasures and pains of knowing
   - Pleasures and pains of learning in the Philebus
   - The pleasures and pains of the cave
   - Coming-to-know and continuing to know
   - Resolving the difficulty
   - A proposal
   - Philebus 55a: pleasure, thought, and the divine life
   21

3. Aristotle on the pleasures of learning and knowing
   - A natural desire to know
   - Pleasures of thought in the Nicomachean Ethics
   - Learning and pleasure in Rhetoric 1.11
   - Learning and pleasure in Poetics 4
   - Conclusions
   52

4. Epicurus and Plutarch on pleasure and human nature
   - Epicureans on the pleasures of learning and knowing
   - Epicureans against Plato, Platonists against Epicurus
   - Plutarch’s Platonist attack on Epicurean pleasures
   - Plutarch and the pleasures of reason
   - Conclusions
   79

© in this web service Cambridge University Press  www.cambridge.org
Contents

5 Measuring future pleasures in Plato’s Protagoras and Philebus 104
   Weighing and measuring 105
   Measurement, illusion, and prudentialism 111
   The salvation of life 116
   Philebus 41e–42c 119
   Conclusions 127

6 Anticipation, character, and piety in Plato’s Philebus 129
   Anticipation and false pleasure 129
   True and false pleasures and piety 136
   The unity of a life 140
   Character and false pleasure 145
   Protagorean hedonism and consistency 151
   Conclusions 154

7 Aristotle on the pleasures and pains of memory 157
   Memory, character, and pleasure in the Nicomachean Ethics 157
   Memory and phantasia 163
   The memories of Eumaeus 168

8 Epicureans and Cyrenaics on anticipating and recollecting pleasures 175
   Epicurean prudential reasoning 175
   The limits of prudential reasoning 186
   Epicureans and their critics on memory, anticipation, and pleasure 196
   Cyrenaic recommendations 201
   The pleasures of confident expectation 204
   Conclusions 207

9 Epilogue 210

References 213
Index locorum 225
Subject index 233