This strong and timely collection provides fresh insights into how Shakespeare’s plays and poems were understood to affect bodies, minds, and emotions. Contemporary criticism has had surprisingly little to say about the early modern period’s investment in imagining literature’s impact on feeling. Shakespearean Sensations brings together scholarship from a range of well-known and new voices to address this fundamental gap. The book includes a comprehensive introduction by Katharine A. Craik and Tanya Pollard, and comprises three sections focusing on sensations aroused in the plays; sensations evoked in the playhouse; and sensations found in the imaginative space of the poems. With dedicated essays on Hamlet, Macbeth, Othello, and Twelfth Night, the collection explores how seriously early modern writers took their relationship with their audiences, and reveals new connections between early modern literary texts and the emotional and physiological experiences of theatergoers.

Katharine A. Craik is Senior Lecturer in Early Modern Literature at Oxford Brookes University. She is the author of Reading Sensations in Early Modern England (2007) and is a contributor to The Cambridge Works of Ben Jonson (2012). She has published widely on early modern literature and culture including essays in Shakespeare Quarterly, Studies in English Literature, The Seventeenth Century, and The Huntington Library Quarterly, and is the editor of Jane Collier’s An Essay on the Art of Ingeniously Tormenting (2006). Most recently, she has contributed to The Oxford Handbook of Shakespeare’s Poetry (2013).

SHAKESPEAREAN SENSATIONS

Experiencing Literature in Early Modern England

EDITED BY
KATHARINE A. CRAIK
AND TANYA POLLARD
Contents

Notes on contributors  page vii
Acknowledgments  x

Introduction: Imagining audiences  1
Katharine A. Craik and Tanya Pollard

PART I  PLAYS

1 Feeling fear in Macbeth  29
Allison P. Hobgood

2 Hearing Iago's withheld confession  47
Allison K. Deutermann

3 Self-love, spirituality, and the senses in Twelfth Night  64
Douglas Trevor

PART II  PLAYHOUSES

4 Conceiving tragedy  85
Tanya Pollard

5 Playing with appetite in early modern comedy  101
Hillary M. Nunn

6 Notes towards an analysis of early modern applause  118
Matthew Steggle

7 Catharsis as “purgation” in Shakespearean drama  138
Thomas Rist
Contents

PART III POEMS

8 Epigrammatic commotions
William Kerwin
157

9 Poetic “making” and moving the soul
Margaret Healy
173

10 Shakespearean pain
Micahael Schoenfeldt
191

  Afterword: Senses of an ending
Bruce R. Smith
208

Bibliography
218

Index
239
Contributors

Katharine A. Craik is Senior Lecturer in Early Modern Literature at Oxford Brookes University. She is the author of Reading Sensations in Early Modern England (2007) and is a contributor to The Cambridge Works of Ben Jonson (2012). She has published widely on early modern literature and culture including essays in Shakespeare Quarterly, Studies in English Literature, The Seventeenth Century, and The Huntington Library Quarterly, and is the editor of Jane Collier’s An Essay on the Art of Ingeniously Tormenting (2006). Most recently, she has contributed to The Oxford Handbook of Shakespeare’s Poetry (2013).

Allison K. Deutermann is Assistant Professor of English at Baruch College, City University of New York. She is the co-editor of Formal Matters: Reading the Materials of English Renaissance Literature (forthcoming), and her essays have appeared in Shakespeare Quarterly as well as in the edited collection Knowing Shakespeare: Senses, Embodiment, Cognition (2010). She is currently writing a book on hearing, taste, and theatrical form in early modern England.

Margaret Healy is Reader in English at the University of Sussex. She teaches many aspects of Renaissance literature, and is particularly interested in the cultural history of the body and the interfaces among literature, medicine, science, and art. She is the author of Shakespeare, Alchemy and the Creative Imagination: The Sonnets and A Lover’s Complaint (2011), Fictions of Disease in Early Modern England: Bodies, Plague and Politics (2001), and Richard II (1998), and the co-editor of Renaissance Transformations: The Making of English Writing 1500–1650 (2009). She edits the new British medical journal Medical Humanities.

Allison P. Hobgood serves as Assistant Professor of English and Women’s and Gender Studies at Willamette University. Her fields of interest are Shakespeare and early modern literature, women’s and... gender studies, and disability studies. She has published articles in Shakespeare Bulletin, European Romantic Review, and Disability Studies Quarterly. She co-edited with David H. Wood a collection of essays called Recovering Disability in Early Modern England (forthcoming). She is currently completing Passionate Playgoing in Early Modern England, a monograph that investigates the feeling of spectatorship in Renaissance theater.

William Kerwin is Associate Professor of English at the University of Missouri. He is the author of Beyond the Body: The Boundaries of Medicine and English Renaissance Drama (2005), and a recent article on satire in the plague prose of William Bullein and Thomas Dekker. His current research interests center on forms of satiric poetry across the sixteenth century, and how that poetry manipulates competing conceptions of time and memory. “The Crossroads of Memory: Satiric Poetry and Time in Tudor England” considers complaint, satiric epigram, and verse satire.

Hillary M. Nunn is Associate Professor of English at the University of Akron. Her current research focuses on intersections between Renaissance literary culture and the era’s domestic medical texts and cookery books. She is the author of Staging Anatomies: Dissection and Tragedy in the Early Stuart Era (2005) as well as “On Vegetating Virgins: Greensickness and the Plant Realm in Early Modern Literature” in the collection The Indistinct Human in Renaissance Literature (2012) and “Home Bodies: Matters of Weight in Renaissance Women’s Medical Manuals” in the volume The Body in Medical Culture (2009).

Thomas Rist is Senior Lecturer in English at the University of Aberdeen in Scotland and a member of the university’s Centre for Early Modern Studies. He is author of various academic essays and articles on the Bruce R. Smith is Dean’s Professor of English at the University of Southern California. A former president of the Shakespeare Association of America, he is the author of five books on Shakespeare and early modern culture, most recently The Key of Green (2009) and Phenomenal Shakespeare (2010), and is general editor of the Cambridge World Shakespeare project.

Douglas Trevor is Associate Professor of English at the University of Michigan. His book, The Poetics of Melancholy in Early Modern England, was published by Cambridge University Press in 2004. He is the co-editor (with Carla Mazzio) of Historicism, Psychoanalysis, and Early Modern Culture (2000). He is presently completing a book on the history of charity.
Acknowledgments

This book has been a collaborative venture at every stage in its development, and we are grateful to the many people who have played a role in its evolution from conception to publication. It first took shape as a seminar on “Shakespearean Sensations,” sponsored by the Shakespearean Association of America in 2006. We are indebted to the SAA, the seminar’s participants, and our respondents: Elizabeth Harvey, Gail Kern Paster, and Bruce Smith. We would not have a book without our contributors, some of whom have patiently held on since the original seminar, and others of whom jumped in later and gamely caught up. While moving towards completion, we have been the grateful recipients of support from Brooklyn College, the CUNY Graduate Center, the Columbia Shakespeare Seminar, and Oxford Brookes University. We are grateful also to Sarah Stanton and Fleur Jones at Cambridge University Press for their support of the volume and the practical work of turning it into a book. We are thankful to Rose Tomassi for valuable assistance in finalizing the manuscript, and for crucial work in earlier stages of its preparation, we are especially grateful to Melina Moore.

Beyond those directly involved with the book’s contents and production, others have been intimately involved in shaping our thoughts on literature and sensation. Between our first conversations about this project and its completion, our investments in emotions, bodies, and the imagination have been deepened by the births and ongoing experience of our children: Heather, Jamie, Bella, and Lucy. For support with this book and much more, we are grateful to our husbands, Steve Chapman and Will Stenhouse.