THE PEASANT IN POSTSOCIALIST CHINA

The role of the peasant in society has been fundamental throughout China’s history, posing difficult, much-debated questions for Chinese modernity. Today, as China becomes an economic superpower, the issue continues to loom large. Can the peasantry be integrated into a new Chinese capitalism, or will it form an excluded and marginalized class? Alexander F. Day’s highly original appraisal explores the role of the peasantry throughout Chinese history and its importance within the development of postsocialist-era politics. Examining the various ways in which the peasant is historicized, Day shows how different perceptions of the rural lie at the heart of the divergence of contemporary political stances and of new forms of social and political activism in China. Indispensable reading for all those wishing to understand Chinese history and politics, The Peasant in Postsocialist China is a new point of departure in the debate as to the nature of tomorrow’s China.

Alexander F. Day is Assistant Professor of History at Occidental College. He grew up in Maine and New Zealand, and has spent over five years in Asia, mostly in China. Professor Day’s research focus is on the rural–urban relationship in China, focusing on the late-imperial period through the twentieth century; his second teaching field is world history. He is a member of the American Historical Association and the Association for Asian Studies.
Contents

Acknowledgments  page vi

Introduction   Peasants, history, and politics  1

1  The peasantry and social stagnation: the roots of the reform-era liberal narrative  13

2  From peasant to citizen: liberal narratives on peasant dependency  47

3  Capitalism and the peasant: new-left narratives  70

4  “Deconstructing modernization”: Wen Tiejun and sannong wenti  92

5  Into the soil: ethnographies of social disintegration  128

6  New rural reconstruction and the attempt to organize the peasantry  154

   Conclusion  186

Glossary  199

Bibliography  208

Index  227
Acknowledgments

First, I would like to thank my mentor, Gail Hershatter, who has put an enormous amount of energy into this book and the dissertation upon which it was based, reading every draft of the manuscript along the way. Chris Connery has shaped this project in numerous ways, both as a reader and through general discussion. Special gratitude also goes to Arif Dirlik, who has offered support and advice throughout the process of writing this book. Emily Honig, Kang Wenqing, Angelina Chin, and Sun Xiaoping read and commented on drafts. Kang Wenqing was especially helpful during research trips to China. Johanna Isaacson’s editorial help was invaluable. Discussions with Johanna Isaacson, Chris Kortright, Michelle Stewart, Gopal Balakrishnan, and Zina Denevan were instrumental in thinking through many of the larger issues surrounding this project. Alessandro Russo’s comments have been valuable in formulating the problematic of this book. Discussions with Matt Hale have stimulated my thinking about the new rural reconstruction movement. I eagerly await the publication of his work on alternative development projects in rural China.

Joel Andreas, Ana Candela, Alex Cook, Jane Hayward, Ho-fung Hung, Rebecca Karl, Fabio Lanza, Jonathan Lassen, Aminda Smith, Saul Thomas, Robert Weil, and Wu Yiching have likewise helped me think about China’s contemporary intellectual scene and politics. Discussions at the 2008 Summer Institute at the Peter Wall Institute for Advanced Studies, University of British Columbia, “The End of the Peasant? Global Capitalism and the Future of Agrarian Society,” broadened my view of the role of the peasant in Chinese historical development: I would particularly like to thank Arif Dirlik, Dong Zhenghua, Abidin Kusno, Melody Chia-Wen Lu, Lü Xinyu, Dianne Newell, Alejandro Rojas, To Xuan Phuc, Immanuel Wallerstein, Wang Shaoguang, Wen Tiejun, and Alexander Woodside.
Acknowledgments

There are a great many people I should thank in China, too many to mention them all here. Wang Hui advised me during a research year in China and has continued to offer helpful guidance since. The Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, with which I was affiliated during a research year in 2003–4, was very helpful in organizing my work in China. I would also especially like to thank Wen Tiejun, He Xuefeng, Han Deqiang, Liu Laoshi, Tan Tongxue, Li Derui, Lao Yuan, Liu Yuanqi, Fan Jinggang, and Li Guangshou. I would like to thank the anonymous readers arranged by Cambridge University Press for detailed and perceptive comments that significantly transformed the manuscript. Of course, I am responsible for all errors and infelicities of the book.

I received generous financial support from the History Department, Humanities Division, Graduate Division, and Institute for Humanities Research at the University of California, Santa Cruz. A Fulbright Fellowship funded a research year in China. The History Department, the Humanities Center, and the Division of Research at Wayne State University and the Eisenberg Institute for Historical Studies at the University of Michigan provided both financial support and intellectual community.

My parents Ed and Caroline have always been an inspiration and sparked intellectual interest from an early age. And, finally, I thank Zina for supporting me through the long years that this project has been brewing. This book is dedicated to them.