Adam Rounce presents a colourful and unusual history of eighteenth-century British literature, exploring ideas of fame through writers who failed to achieve the literary success they so desired. Recounting the experiences of less canonical writers, including Richard Savage, Anna Seward, and Percival Stockdale, Rounce discusses the inefficacy of apparent literary success, the forms of vanity and folly often found in failed authorship, and the changing perception of literary reputation from the beginning of the eighteenth century to the emergence of Romanticism. The book opens up new ways of thinking about the nature of literary success and failure, given the post-Romantic idea of the doomed creative genius, and provides an alternative narrative to critical accounts of the famous and successful.

Adam Rounce is a Lecturer at the University of Nottingham. He has written on various seventeenth- and eighteenth-century writers, including Dryden, Johnson, Pope, Akenside, Cowper, Warburton, and Wilkes. He is also co-editing two volumes for the Cambridge Edition of the Works of Jonathan Swift.
FAME AND FAILURE 1720–1800

The Unfulfilled Literary Life

ADAM ROUNCE
Contents

Acknowledgements  \hspace{1cm} page vi

Introduction: motion without progress  \hspace{1cm} 1

1  An author to be let  \hspace{1cm} 28

2  The exemplary failure of Dr Dodd  \hspace{1cm} 69

3  Anna Seward’s cruel times  \hspace{1cm} 109

4  Percival Stockdale’s alternative literary history  \hspace{1cm} 154

Conclusion  \hspace{1cm} 194

Notes  \hspace{1cm} 208

Bibliography  \hspace{1cm} 237

Index  \hspace{1cm} 245
Acknowledgements

A book about failure (as I’ve been reminded more than once over the last few years) is a considerable hostage to fortune; thanks are due to many for its eventual completion and arrival into the world, not least to Linda Bree and Maartje Scheltens at Cambridge University Press, for their good advice and splendid company over the period of its composition and publication. I have been helped by the librarians at the University of Bristol Library; the Bodleian Library, Oxford; The British Library; and the Houghton Library, Harvard; and by the anonymous readers of the manuscript for Cambridge University Press. Parts of this book were given at research seminars at the Universities of Birmingham, Central England, Exeter, Glasgow, Nottingham Trent, and Oxford, and at assorted meetings of the British and American Societies for Eighteenth-Century Studies. Parts of Chapters 3 and 4 appear in a different context in my essay, ‘Toil and Envy: Some Responses to the Lives of the Poets’, in Samuel Johnson After 300 Years, edited by Greg Clingham and Philip Smallwood (Cambridge University Press, 2009).

As well as colleagues, former and present, at Bristol, Keele, and Manchester Metropolitan Universities who may have added to the book (wittingly or otherwise), I am indebted to the following people for their various forms of help over the years: Hugh Adlington, Paul Baines, Rebecca Barr, Andrew Bennett, Andrew Biswell, the late Skip Brack, Paddy Bullard, Michael Bundock, Steven Cheeke, Stephen Clarke, Marcus Dahl, Robert DeMaria, Helen Deutsch, Nikolai Duffy, Jess Edwards, Tim Fulford, Paul Fuller, Christine Gerrard, Stuart Gillespie, Nick Groom, Ben Hawes, David Hopkins, Steven James, Freya Johnston, Robert Jones, Jacob Sider Jost, Antti Karjalainen, Steve Karian, Simon Kovesi, Richard Lambert, Emma Liggins, Roger Lonsdale, Jack Lynch, Dafydd Moore, Lucy Munro, James Noggle, Adam Porkay, Juan Pellicer, Mark Pedreira, Henry Power, Paul Price, Claude Rawson, Alice Reeves, John Richetti, Tim Saunders, John Scanlan, Steve Scherwatzky, Phil Smallwood, Richard
Acknowledgements

Terry, Christopher Vilmar, David Venturo, Howard Weinbrot (the other member of the Stockdale club), Dinah Wood, and James Woolley.

The most important contributions of all have come from John Lucas (for the initial idea, and the invaluable example of Iain Fletcher’s interest in the poets of the 1890s); Jim McLaverty, Tom Mason, and Abigail Williams, who all read parts of the book, even at its most baggy and wearisome, suggested how it could be improved, and encouraged me to finish it; and lastly from Louise, who ensured its completion.